O'Mahoney Would Make Jobs by Tax On Machines

Reward Is Sought For Employers Who Rely on Men To Produce Goods

By William V. Nessly
Post Staff Writer

Legislation to tax the use of machines and reward employers who achieve their production by use of manpower will be offered in Congress today by Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming.

The Senator, who also is chairman of the Temporary National Economic (Monopoly) committee, said his proposal is based on the belief that "Congress, by a simple law, can create such an incentive for the private employment of labor that we can speedily put an end to our difficulties."

Simultaneously, the C. I. O., in its publication "Economic Outlook," placed the unemployed in January at 11,936,000, and said the country "is still hovering on the edge of a very serious liquidation and depression."

At the Capitol, the Conference on Unemployment, composed of 60 House members of four parties, announced personnel of 12 subcommittees to study various angles of the problem of "why 10,000,000 Americans are out of work."

Tax Machinery Used

O'Mahoney's bill, in tentative form, would "reward those employers whose output is secured by the more than average use of manpower" and "require a contribution from those employers whose output is produced by more than average use of machine power."

It is in the form of an amendment to the internal revenue code, providing for a "labor differential" tax (percentage to be determined), and allowing credits based on the amount of remuneration paid to employers. If a producer's credits exceed his tax he would be eligible for a payment from the Treasury, of a percentage of the total wages.

"There can be no solution of the farm problem," O'Mahoney said, "until industrial unemployment is ended, and there can be no beginning of any program for balancing the budget until we find the way to put men back at real jobs paying real wages."

He quoted Federal Reserve Board figures to show that, in comparison with 1929, "the trend of production is up and the trend of unemployment down."

Balance Is Sought

"This trend cannot be permitted to go on without eventual disaster," he said.

The purpose of his bill was said to be "to balance men and machines."

"It is written," he said, "upon the theory that the machine can be made to pay its way in terms of human production in such a manner that society will receive the maximum benefit from the full employment of both men and machines."

The C. I. O.'s Economic Outlook produced a chart showing an increase of 28 per cent in "labor productivity" between 1929 and 1939, resulting, it said, in the "employment of 2,000,000 less workers in 1939 than were required to produce a smaller output in 1929."

Committee Seeks Program

It noted that "profits of corporations for the fourth quarter of 1939 reached a higher figure than in any fourth quarter previously reported, despite the unemployment, commenting that the increased labor productively, "through technological improvements has cut wage costs and employment."

Empasizing again its contention of a close connection between an "adequate" WPA program and recovery, the Outlook presented another chart which it said indicated "that increases in the percentage of the unemployed placed on WPA had a considerable effect on the general

Girl Killed, Man Is Hurt On Highway

Eight Others Injured As Motorists Pack Roads in D. C. Area

A young woman was killed instantly and her companion critically hurt when struck by an automobile on the Baltimore boulevard at Muirkirk, Md., late last night. Neither has been identified.

Prince Georges County police said the two were walking across the highway when they were struck by an automobile operated by James Macklin of 523½ Third street northeast. He was held for the coroner.

The girl, a brunette, was about 25, 5 feet, 3 inches tall, weighed about 125 pounds and wore a green coat with a green fur collar. The man, about 32, was rushed to Casualty Hospital by the Bladensburg Rescue Squad. He wore a black overcoat, is 5 feet 5 inches tall, weighs about 180 pounds, and has black hair.

Eight persons, including two Park policemen, were injured when thousands of Sunday motorists jammed roads and highways.

Privates Charles T. Apfelbeck and Joseph E. Shawhan, of Park Police, were injured when their cruiser crashed into the rear of another automobile on Mount Vernon boulevard near Wellington View bridge, south of Alexandria, Va. Both were released after hospital treatment.

They reported that an automobile operated by Roland H. Cooke, 28, of 3422 N street northwest, suddenly slowed and turned toward the center of the road. When Apfelbeck sounded his horn and attempted to pass on the right, they said, Cooke

Funds Needed In D.C. Welfare, Bondy Insists

Director Commends D'Alesandro Report As 'A Real Service'

District welfare needs, spotlighted in the D'Alesandro subcommittee report, "can be met only through additional funds," Robert E. Bondy, director of public welfare, declared yesterday.

"I believe the subcommittee has honestly tried to evaluate the situation," Bondy said. "And the report should be of real service, especially in calling attention to needs which have been allowed to accumulate over a period of years because of insufficient funds."

The report of the Congressional investigation, published yesterday, failed to mention the amount which would be necessary to put the recommendations into effect, Bondy said "that is a matter for judgment of the subcommittee on District appropriations."

Other Fields Are Cited

Bondy called it "a comprehensive report which covers the significant points that merit attention."

He warned, however, that citizens should not lose sight of two other great fields under the welfare board, which did not come within the scope of this investigation.

"The report dealt only with the institutional program of the board," Bondy said. "It didn't undertake to go into child welfare services or into public assistance. The public should not lose sight of the needs in those two great fields. One can see the crowding of a building, but when families are not able to receive relief which they need, the situation is not so easily visualized."

Asked Drastic Changes

The report of the seven-man House subcommittee, headed by Representative D'Alesandro (Democrat), of Maryland, called for drastic changes in District welfare institutions, including the Home for the Aged and Infirm (Blue Plains), the Receiving Home for Children, National Training School for Girls, Industrial Home School and the District Training School at Laurel.

The 15-page report will be given the House District Committee today. It is expected to be referred to the subcommittee on District appropriations.

G.O.P. Drops Convention Book, Urges Democrats Follow Suit

Abandonment of the issuance of convention books by both political parties this year was called for last night by John Hamilton, Republican national chairman, who announced that no such book would be published by the G. O. P. for its Philadelphia sessions.

Source of vast party revenue and occasional hot disputes since the first one was issued for the Democratic convention of 1856, the convention book brought perhaps its greatest controversy in 1936 when the Democrats were accused of using President Roosevelt's autograph in disposing of copies of the book to corporations barred by the corrupt practices act from contributing to the party treasury.

Announcing the Republican decision, Hamilton said that "we hope the Democratic National Committee will see fit to follow us in the course adopted."

Calling the convention book a "subterfuge" for evading the law, Hamilton continued:

"In 1936 this device was so shamelessly and extensively used by the Democratic National Committee to obtain funds that it shocked the morality of the Nation. It will be recalled that not only did the Democratic Committee undertake to shake down corporations for 'advertising' in its Convention Book, netting $385,525 from that source, but the committee with the aid of the President obtained $554,626 more from the 'sale' of these books, primarily to corporations.

"It will be recalled that even before this Democratic Convention

Hatch Bill Sidetracking Faces Fight

Austin Urges Battle to Prevent Floor Substitution Of Farm Measure

With the economy move on, Capitol Hill all but wrecked by committee increases in the farm appropriation bill, there were indications last night that efforts to call up the farm measure in the Senate today by displacing the Hatch "clean politics" extension measure may encounter stout opposition.

Senator Austin, of Vermont, assistant Republican leader, expressed the opinion that if Senator Hatch (Democrat), of New Mexico, makes a sufficiently vigorous fight he can obtain enough votes to prevent his filibuster-entangled measure from being shunted aside.

The Senate is to vote at 2 p. m. on a Hatch act amendment offered by Senator Brown (Democrat), of Michigan, to prohibit political activity by any person having "profit" contracts or dealings with the Government. The Hatch bill itself would extend to District and State employes paid wholly or partially with Federal funds the ban on political activity already in effect against Government employes.

To Require New Taxes

Following the vote on the Brown amendment, Senator Russell (Democrat), of Georgia, who led the fight for the big committee increases in the farm bill, is scheduled to move to lay aside the Hatch bill temporarily.

Should the move succeed, it is the plan of leaders to take up also the House-approved measure for a three-year extension of the Hull reciprocal trade agreement program before resuming the "clean politics" fight.

New taxes or an increase in the $45,000,000,000 debt limit will be required, it was conceded yesterday, if the farm fund increases are approved by the Senate and then by the House, which previously rejected them.

While economy forces previously had cut Presidential budget items by $292,000,000 in an effort to avoid levying the $460,000,000 in new taxes which the President said would be necessary, the Senate Appropriations Committee Saturday added some $309,000,000 to the farm bill, chiefly for parity payments to farmers and for removal of surplus crops.

Senate Passage Conceded

Senate approval of the increases was taken for granted yesterday, but there was a tendency to look to the size of the opposition vote be-

Nazis Scuttle Steamer Off Puerto Rico

Halted by British Cruiser, Crew Sets Vessel Afire, Flees; Some Are Missing

London, March 10 (AP).—Interception of the 5,600-ton German steamer Hannover by a British cruiser near Puerto Rico, in the strategic heart of the Pan-American neutrality zone, was announced tonight in a communique which said the Nazi vessel had been fired and abandoned by her crew to avoid capture.

The admiralty said the interception had taken ptace Thursday night in the Mona Passage, a 75-mile strip of water separating Puerto Rico from the Dominican Republic.

The Hannover, loaded with 6,000 tons of ore and lumber, had sailed Tuesday from Willemstad, Netherlands West Indies, in an attempt to run the British blockade. Willemstad is about 460 miles due south of Mona Channel.

British Lose 3 Ships

[International News Service reported from Ciudad Trujillo that 37 of the Hannover's crew had landed near Huguey, Dominican Republic, but that 55 others were missing.]

The 2,179-ton freighter Chevychase sank after an explosion in the North Sea last night, while the Maindy Hill, 1,918 tons, went down after a collision with an unidentified vessel early today. The crews of both ships were saved.

The British steamer Borthwick, 1,097 tons, was mined during the week-end off the Netherlands coast near Flushing. All the crew members were saved.

Nazis Claim 32 Tankers

Berlin, March 10 (AP).—The German high command asserted today that 10 per cent of Britain's tanker fleet had been destroyed in the war at sea.

It placed Britain's loss at 32 tankers, aggregating 230,125 tons.

(British said the German figures were exaggerated.)

Ship Torpedoed Off Portugal

Lisbon, March 10 (AP).—A ship whose identity was not disclosed today was reported torpedoed 17 miles off the south coast of Portugal.

Several survivors were reported approaching land near Faro.

(The reported torpedoing was in the general area of a distress call sent out by the Greek freighter Alexandros, 4,343 tons, late today. She gave her position as about 100 miles off the southern tip of Portugal but no other details were received.)

Reds Renew Bombing, Peace Hopes Fade; Ribbentrop Sees Duce

Possible Course Of Allied Forces In Finnish War Weighed in Rome

By the Associated Press

Rome, March 10.—Premier Mussolini and Foreign Minister von Ribentrop of Germany conferred for an hour and a quarter today on what authoritative quarters indicated was the possibility of Britain and France sending troops to aid Finland in her conflict with Russia.

Italians close to the foreign ministry said Von Ribbentrop did most of the talking. He was understood to have informed Il Duce of Germany's situation after six months of war and of Fuehrer Hitler's plans for further conduct of the war.

Neutrality Is Recognized

Gianvanni Ansaldo wrote in Il Telegrafo, newspaper of Foreign Minister Count Ciano, that Von Ribbentrop was too wise to ask Premier Mussolini to change Italy's policy of nonbelligerency. Instead, said Ansaldo, the German would recognize Italy's "absolute liberty of action and decision," and refrain from anything that might seem to be a "pressing invitation."

A brief communique on the conference said only that the two men had a "cordial" talk and would meet again tomorrow.

Von Ribbentrop also is to be received by Pope Pius tomorrow in a conference at which it was expected the subject of sending a papal envoy into the German-occupied sections of Poland would be discussed.

Von Ribbentrop found tension between Italy and Britain suddenly eased as a result of Italy's agreement, announced yesterday, to refrain from bringing further shipments of German coal from Rotterdam. This agreement was regarded in diplomatic circles as indication of an Italian desire to avoid trouble.

Scandinavia Chief Topic

The chief topic of today's conference appeared to have been Scandinavia. Responsible Italians said Allied aid to Finland through Sweden and Norway would open deliberately a new war front in which both Germany and Russia soon would be fighting against the British and French.

In such circumstances, it was said, the possibility of a German-Russian military alliance would not be precluded.

Although the Italian government considered a settlement between Finland and Russia strictly a matter for those two countries to decide, Italian preoccupation with the possibility of Allied intervention was evident.

The intention of Italy to remain a nonbelligerent while an ally of Germany has been affirmed in circles close to the government.

May Resume Trade Talk

Copyright by New York Times

London, March 10.—Italian officials here expressed confidence today that recently suspended trade talks with the British would be resumed soon, this time on a new basis, whereby Italy would offer to sell to Great Britain airplane engines, certain military equipment, and agricultural produce in exchange for coal and other raw materials.

The British were optimistic a trade agreement would shortly be discussed again.

Berlin, March 10.—Dressed in the uniform which marks him as the "first soldier" of his country, Adolf Hitler today spoke to the Nation on the occasion of Heroes' Memorial Day.

His speech was brief and devoid of all political allusions.

It was the first important anniversary of the fighting forces whose ranks now guard Germany's frontiers, for five years ago today the Fuehrer proclaimed universal conscription which marked the birth of the peoples army of the Third Reich.

The spirit of his utterances was best typified by the concluding words of the Fuehrer's 13-minute oration when he swore by "holy oath that this war, which was forced on us by the capitalistic power holders—France and Great Britain—must end in the most glorious victory in German history."

His speech, though more temperate than his recent utterances, still was

Discussion Doomed

By the Associated Press

Helsinki (Monday), March 11. Fear that Russian-Finnish peace negotiations were failing spread in Finland early today after a Finnish language broadcast from Moscow violently attacked Premier Risto Ryti, now in the Russian capital as head of the Finnish delegation.

This attack came only a few hours after the Finnish government announced that Ryti and three other Finnish representatives were in Moscow discussing peace terms with Soviet officials.

It was regarded as especially significant that the nightly Moscow broadcast in the Finnish language had been kept off the air for two days when the negotiations were in early stages.

Fighting Continues on Front

At the same time it was officially announced here that the Russian air force had resumed its bombing of civilian areas on a "comparatively large scale today."

Fighting was continuing all along the front, with the Finns reporting repulse of the Russian drives and great Russian losses, but admitting the Red army had penetrated to the west shore of Viipuri Bay and was attempting to consolidate its foothold there to take the city from the rear.

(The Soviet command reported the town of Nisalahti, only 9 miles west of Viipuri, and the island of Varjesaari, in Viipuri Bay, were captured Sunday.

(The Island of Vupratsu, in Lake Ladoga, west of the town of Pitkaranta, also was captured, the Russian communique said.)

Soldiers Urged to Quit

The Moscow broadcaster renewed appeals to the Finnish soldiers to stop fighting and to revolt against what was termed a "capitalistic government."

"Comrade, lay doyn your arms and join the Kuusinen Peoples army," the announcer urged.

He was referring to the Terijoki government of Otto Kuusinen, a Communist, which Soviet Russia has recognized heretofore as the only government of Finland.

The Finnish communique telling of civilian bombings said "Villahde and Vonkola and other places in southern Finland were visited, and a train was machine gunned between Helsinki and Borga." Available reports said no one was killed.

Sweden Opens the Way

Terms of the Russian proposals were not disclosed. A communique said direct negotiations had been opened in Moscow "to find out whether possibilities exist for a cessation of hostilities and a restoration of peace," but that "no decision has beer taken up to the present."

Last night's announcement, which was attributed to the semiofficial Finnish News Bureau, said that "this contact has been established

U. S. Army to Let Allies Buy New 400-Mile-an-Hour Planes

The War Department will soon release to the Anglo-French air purchasing mission one of its most recent and fastest models of fighting ships, it was learned on good authority last night.

After some discussion as to the advisability of the move in view of its possible international repercussions, the Army and Navy Munitions Export Control Board has decided to allow the sale to the Allies of the Curtiss P-40, the 400-mile-per-hour pursuit ship, developed for production during the present year.

Officials of the Army were particular to make clear that the transaction would not involve any departure from the policies previously stated in connection with the sale of planes to foreign nations.

When the Navy released 44 planes to the Finnish government so that they might have immediate delivery on them, officials said that the Navy would benefit from the transaction because it would get better models with more recent equipment. The same statement was made last night, high War Department officials saying that so much superior and faster fighting plane than the Curtiss P-40 had been developed in American factories and would soon be in production.

However, the present case differs from that of the Brewster Pursuit planes given to the Finns in that it does not mean that the Allies would be able to get from the Army any Curtiss P-40's which might be on order for the Army and would

SLOGANS: PRO AND CON

Between drinks, some of the wooliest wits in the Capital have been coining campaign slogans for the candidates of 1940. Sometimes, even during drinks, with a gurgle.

10 Hardboard Firms Charged With Monopoly

U. S. to File Suit Today In Expanded Drive In Building Industry

By the Associated Press

The Justice Department, expanding its campaign against alleged restraints of trade in the building industry, charged yesterday that 10 companies have monopolized the trade in hardboard, a composition board used in interior construction work.

The charge was contained in a suit which Attorney Gen. Jackson said would be entered today in the Federal Court for Southern New York against the Masonite Corporation and 9 other companies. Jackson described the action as a test of the "validity of the use of patent privileges to circumvent the anti-trust laws."

Hardboard, he said, is produced under patents held by the Masonite Corporation which manufactures 96.5 per cent of the 200,000,000 square feet of the boards made annually from wood or vegetable fiber.

The other companies, he continued, sell the Masonite Corporation's product under agency contracts which permit Masonite to fix prices. These other companies "are potential competitors in the manufacture of hardboard," he argued.

Cancellation Sought

The department, Jackson said, is of the opinion that such contracts are an unreasonable restraint of trade, but "no case has yet been presented to the courts which definitely establishes the illegality of such arrangements."

For that reason, he added, the department seeks "a clear declaration" in equity proceedings. The suit will ask for cancellation of the agency agreements.

"If the department is successful in this suit there should be a considerable reduction in price and a correspoding increase in sales of hardboard," the department said.

"If this (agency) scheme is invalidated the defendants other than Masonite may be expected to undertake the manufacture of hardboard. The logical consequence will be the development of alternative sources of supply and the beginning of price competition in the sale of hardboard."

Companies Named

Ben Alexander, president of the Masonite Corporation, disagreed. In a statement issued soon after Jackson's he said that agency contracts similiar to those used by his company had been recognized for 200 years and have been upheld by the Supreme Court. He said if the agency contracts were done away with the cost of the product would be increased.

The companies the department said would be named in the suit were: Masonite Corporation, Chicago and Laurel, Miss.; Celotex Corporation, Chicago and Marerro, La.; Certain-Teed Products Corporation, New York; Johns-Manville Sales Corporation, New York; Insulite Company, Minneapolis; Flintkote Company, New York; National Gypsum Company, Buffalo; Wood Conversion Company, Cloquet, Minn.; Armstrong Cork Company, Lancaster, Pa.; and Dant and Russell, Inc., Portland, Ore.

Nye Asks Jackson's Views

Senator Nye (Republican, North Dakota), said yesterday the Justice Department had followed a "policy of appeasement" toward firms accused of anti-trust violations by allowing the companies to agree in civil proceedings to the imposition of regulations rather than to press prosecution.

He made public a letter to Jackson in which he said "many have earnestly hoped that, as you succeeded to the high office of Attorney General," that policy would be discontinued. The letter contained a series of questions asking Jackson's views on consent decree procedure.

Nye told Jackson that he "particularly opposed the consent decree agreements, in effect and pending, between your department and the Columbia Gas and Electric Corporation and allied defendants."

In a statement, Nye said that inquiries and discussions with Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold, in charge of anti-trust cases, convinced him "that only by intervention of the United States Senate can equal justice under the anti-trust laws be assured."

Msgr. Sheen Says 'Sense of Guilt' Oppresses U. S.

New York, March 10.—The Right Rev. Fulton J. Sheen, professor of philosophy at the Catholic University of America, preaching on the importance and need of confession today, in a sermon in St. Patrick's Cathedral, said that neuroses were increasing throughout the United States as a result of a suppressed sense of guilt."

Msgr. Sheen said there had never been so much melancholy as there is at present. He said "conscience, guilt, sin" was the cause of it. People, he said, were "looking for deliverance and not finding it."

He said psychoanalysis merely "keeps the wound of sin open," whereas confession contained forgiveness. "You and I, if we are honest with ourselves," he said, "do not want our sins explained away. We want our sins forgiven."

British Take Welles Aide For His Valet

By the United Press

London, March 10.—James Reeks, British valet extraordinary and "gentleman's gentleman" to Undersecretary of State Welles, came home today to find himself in the eyes of the British public almost as much a hero as his impeccably dressed master.

And J. Pierrepont Moffat, chief of the European Division of the State Department and a graduate of Groton and Harvard, who flew to London with the valet, had to come all this way to learn that a "gentleman's gentleman" is supposed to wear a derby hat and that anyone else who wears one is likely to be mistaken for a valet.

Moffat, in fact, was mistaken for a valet—for the redoubtable Reeks himself—and he was almost forced to exhibit his diplomatic passport to a British newspaperman to prove that he is neither British nor a manservant.

The Moffat derby—bowlers they call them over here—caused all the trouble.

London reporters had been set out to get a story about Reeks and when the French airplane which brought Welles to London landed at Heston they massed on Moffat because he was wearing a bowler and carrying a brief case.

Meanwhile, Reeks, who had slipped quietly from the plane as a gentleman's gentleman should, sped quickly away to his master's quarters in the Dorchester Hotel.

A girl reporter finally found Reeks at the Dorchester laying out his master's clothing for dinner and this is what she learned:

Reeks left England 18 years ago after serving Lord Derby and later Lord Wimborne.

He has an American wife and a 16-year-old son.

(In Washington, Reeks lives with his wife and son at 1803 Sixteenth street southeast.—Editor's note.)

Before entering the service of Welles, Reeks was with "one of the Vanderbilts."

He did not accompany his master to Germany because the Germans won't let Britons in their country.

He will spend his London holiday visiting his father, a retired bricklayer who lives in a suburb of Bournemouth.

He does not agree that all valets wear derby hats and that their masters rarely do. Indeed, if one had but noticed the Undersecretary when he stepped from the plane at Heston, "Mr. Welles himself was wearing a bowler."

Citizens Save Sick Orphan With Writ

Santa Rosa, Calif., March 8 (U.P.).—Citizens by court order today prevented return of a critically ill orphan boy from the Somona County Hospital to Stockton, 150 miles distant, where he was wanted as a ward of the county. Moving the boy would mean almost certain death, Dr. Dwight Barnett, of the Somona Hospital, said.

The lad, John Coumas, 15, was stricken, while living at the Salvation Army's home for boys at nearby Lytton, with acute leukemia, a disease usually fatal.

Stockton authorities and his legal guardians of San Joaquin County took steps to return him there, and Dr. Barnett advised that "it would mean almost certain death."

Members of the American Legion and the Kiwanis Club heard that a Stockton ambulance was coming for the boy and asked, Attorney J. A. Ratchford to file for a writ of prohibition.

As Superior Judge Donald Geary prepared to sign the writ, he saw from his courthouse window the San Joaquin ambulance en route to the hospital. Ratchford grabbed the writ and arrived on the heels of the stewards. They returned to Stockton without Coumas.

Book was printed in 1936, agents of the Democratic National Committee successfully high-pressured a number of corporations into paying the Democratic Committee sums ranging up to $10,000 purportedly in payment of copies of the Convention Book.

"A second drive to get funds from corporations, on the pretense that they were buying the Democratic Book was made during the 1936 campaign. These two efforts netted the committee $481,487, according to its sworn statement filed with Congress.

"It will be recalled further that in 1937 the Democratic National Committee undertook to raise funds by the 'sale' of 1,500 copies of the Convention Book which were left over. President Roosevelt was persuaded to autograph these books for the purpose of 'selling' them and the Democratic Committee's agents again made a round of the executive offices of large corporations, many doing business with the Federal Government, taking orders for these Presidentially-autographed books at $250 each. Again checks for sums as high as $5,000 and $10,000 rolled into the committee coffers, netting the Democratic National Committee from that effort the sum of $73,133.

"Altogether the Democratic National Committee received $940,145 from the sale of advertising in and the purported sale of copies of the 1936 Democratic Convention Book. Even though the then Attorney-General gave his approval of this disgraceful undertaking, the collection of funds from corporations purportedly in payment of the Convention Books clearly was an evasion of the spirit of the law."

The decision to issue no G. O. P. book this year, Chairman Hamilton said, was made on recommendation of Ernest T. Weir, Republican National finance chairman, and the subcommittee on concessions of the committee on arrangements for the convention, of which Harrison Spangler of Iowa, is chairman.

Ohio Backs Sawyer

Columbus, Ohio, March 10 (AP).—Cleavage among Ohio Democrats narrowed tonight with settlement of an intra-party fight over selection of national cenvention delegates.

With the accord came an indication of undivided support for Charles Sawyer as Ohio's "favorite son" Presidential candidate. A national committeeman, he is leading a third-term movement for President Roosevelt.

Settlement of the delegate dispute permits a party group headed by Ray T. Miller, former Cleveland Mayor, to name delegate candidates in three populous northern Ohio Congressional districts.

It also seemingly checks efforts to induce Postmaster General Farley to head a partial delegate list opposing the Sawyer-indorsed slate.

"Miller's victory in his fight with Sawyer over delegate selections makes it unlikely that an opposition slate will be entered in Ohio," commented Francis W. Poulson, former State Democratic chairman and a leader of the Farley movement.

Poulson added he could not announce a definite decision until he conferred with Farley tomorrow.

If a Farley delegate was decided upon, it was understood it "would be 100 per cent for Franklin D. Roosevelt if he sees fit to become a candidate."

Wheeler Argues Merits of His Waterway Regulation Bill With Transportation Experts

A Senate authority on transportation and representatives of railroads, waterways and highways cross-examined one another last night on the merits and troubles of each carried on the American Forum of the Air, broadcast from Interior Building studios over WOL.

Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, chairman of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee and chairman of a joint Congressional conference on a bill that would place waterway transportation under Federal regulation, argued in favor of the proposed law to equalize competition between water and rail carriers.

Standing by Wheeler in most of the argument was J. J. Pelley, president of the Association of American Railroads, who urged regulation of all carriers on the same basis, and removal of subsidies to shipping.

Less Regulation Asked

Former Representative William J. Driver, of Arkansas, chairman of the board of directors, National Rivers and Harbors Congress, warned that water carriers held down rail rates, and that regulation would inevitably raise shipping costs. Chester H. Gray, director of the National Highway Users Conference, called for more competition and less regulation.

Wheeler asserted that low water rates, instead of benefiting the consumer and small farmer, have only increased the profits of the monopolistic industries, "such as steel and oil." He admitted, when questioned by Driver, that the proposed regulation would not reach effectively the contract water carriers.

"I believe that all competing carriers should be regulated, all or none," declared Senator Wheeler. "No one knows better than the railroads themselves that without the restraints of regulation the railroads could quickly . . . destroy inland and some of the coastwise carriers."

"Public Gets Benefit"

The railroad crisis today, insisted Pelley, is due to unfair competition from subsidized and unregulated competitors, particularly water carriers. He denied charges by Wheeler and Gray that extravagance had played a large part in financially upsetting the railroads, maintaining that railroad operations were more efficient than ever.

While railroads have had to maintain their own transportation systems, Pelley claimed, waterways were getting subsidies from the Federal Government and paid nothing toward waterway improvements. He defended public land grants to railroads as being contracts with the Government, by which the Government benefited through lower rates and enhanced value of land.

A major benefit of low water rates, observed Driver, is that the base price of production all over the country is reduced so that everybody shares in the advantages, not only consumers located at ports.

"As soon as a waterway is constructed and the water carriers begin to inaugurate low rates," Driver added, "then the competing ways reduce their rates. The public gets the benefit of these reductions, but the waterway does not get the benefit of that traffic."

Gray felt that a minimum of regulation is desired for all forms of transportation, including also planes and pipelines; that taxes on these systems should be reasonable and bearable; that competition must be maintained; and that the "fellow who pays the freight" ought to be taken into consideration.

Theodore Granik, radio commentator and founder of the program, presided.

Mrs. Burleson AdmitsSlaying, Police Claim

Shot Her Successor As Colonel's Wife In 'Vision,' She Says

By the Associated Press

Columbia, S. C., March 10.—Breaking a two-day silence during which she protested her memory was clouded, 51-year-old Mrs. May Walker Burleson related today, police said, that her mind was filled with thoughts of her "wrecked home" when she walked into a hotel cafeteria here and fatally shot the wife of her former husband.

Later, however, her attorney, Claud N. Sapp, of Columbia, said she told him she had nc clear picture of what happened, and that she didn't know whether her confession to police resulted from the suggestion of officers' questions or from her actual memory of the slaying.

Police Chief W. H. Rawlinson quoted the divorcee as saying: "I walked from behind her and walked in front of the table where she was eating lunch and shot her. No one had to point her out to me. I knew her." The victim, 55-year-old Mrs. Richard C. Burleson, wife of a United States Army colonel stationed near here, was slain Friday.

"When that woman (Mrs. Burleson) passed me while I was sitting in the lobby of the mezzanine," the prisoner said in her purported confession, "the vision of my mother came before me and with it the thoughts of my wrecked home and my mind went blank." Her mother died two years ago.

The first Mrs. Burleson was divorced from Col. Burleson in 1938. They were married in 1908. The second Mrs. Burleson was named correspondent in the vigorously fought divorce suit.

The tall, matronly Galveston, Tex., artist, who once was an avid suffragette, was booked on a charge of murder. An inquest was set for Tuesday night.

The first Mrs. Burleson insisted in the purported confession that she did not shoot the second Mrs. Burleson from the back, as eyewitnesses said, and as an autopsy indicated to Coroner J. A. Sargeant.

Senate Farm Bill Passage Conceded

fore predicting House reaction. It was felt that a close Senate vote might give House economy leaders a chance to rally their forces sufficiently to reject the increases.

Senator Russell, meanwhile, insisted that the additional appropriations need not require fresh taxation. He told the Associated Press the parity payments would not be made until the fall of 1941 and that farm prices might rise sufficiently in the meanwhile to make the payments unnecessary.

There appeared little chance of making sufficiently large cuts in other appropriation bills to avoid new taxes. Only the defense and relief funds measures remain for the Senate to act on.

Should the Hatch bill be displaced today for the farm and trade agreements measures, consideration of the former would be delayed for an indefinite time.

While Majority Leader Barkley was of the opinion the farm bill could be disposed of in a couple of days and the trade resolution in about the same length of time. Hatch bill supporters were fearful its opponents would drag out the debate on the two intervening measures in order further to delay consideration of the New Mexico Senator's controversial legislation.

House on D. C. Bills Today

Senator Minton, of Indiana, assistant majority leader, is leading the fight on the Hatch bill in the face of Barkley's determination that it shall pass.

With the scene of major controversy centering for the week in the Senate, the House, after devoting today to District of Columbia legislation, is scheduled to take up tomorrow the Vinson naval expansion authorization bill. This measure, curtailed at the House Naval Affairs Committee hearings from its original objective of an authorization for a 25 per cent expansion in the Navy's strength at an estimated cost of $1,500,000,000 to a 10 per cent expansion at a prospective cost of $650,000,000, offers little threat of controversy. Representative Vinson, of Georgia, chairman of the committee, who will pilot it on the floor, predicted last night it would be passed before adjournment tomorrow. Representative Rayburn, of Texas, House majority leader, was a little more cautious in his forecast, expecting passage tomorrow or Wednesday.

After the naval bill is disposed of, the House is to take up the legislative appropriation bill for the next fiscal year, which involves little or no controversy.

The battles over "snooping" questions planned for the 1940 census and the proposals for immediate amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, meanwhile, will continue to center in committee hearings, the former in the Senate Commerce Committee and the latter in the House Labor Committee.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Covenant-First Presbyterian Church presents Gabriel Faure's "Requiem" Sunday afternoon under direction of Theodore Schaefer. Soloists: Ina Holtzscheiter, Elizabeth Glass, William Hayghe and Gordon Barner. Sylvia Meyer, assisting harpist.

Most important of local musical events yesterday was the first performance in Washington of Gabriel Faure's "Requiem" by the chancel choir of Covenant-First Presbyterian Church, under the direction of Theodore Schaefer. The presentation of this beautiful work, impressive in its restraint and tender melancholy, as a choral vesper service was attended by a reverent audience in the receptive quietude which befits the hearing of devotional music. Every listener must have left the edifice with a heightened sense of spiritual experience.

Ray C. Brown

One is aware of a very personal feeling in this "Requiem," which seems to implore eternal rest not for the heroic great or for all mankind, but for someone deeply loved and mourned. The tone of the music is intimate and its colors are subdued with harmonic refinement. The delicacy and charm of the writing, the exquisite proportions of structure and the soft blending of tonal tints remind one of a painting by Puvis de Chavannes. No garish lights disturb the emotion of sorrow and no harsh modulations perturb the faith that is voiced in a prayer that is not clamant but resigned.

A calm confidence suffuses the "Introit" with its gently-intoned invocation, and the "Kyrie" simply founded upon the tonic and dominant. Tenor and contralto solo voices sing "O Domine Jesu" with the chorus adjutant in support. The "Sanctus" is not a shout of adoration but an awed utterance, which begins softly to the obligato of the harp, swells to a climax at the words, "Et terra gloria tua," and dies away to an echo of "Hosanna in excelsis."

The soprano solo, "Pie Jesu," is a miniature masterpiece of melodic development over a harmonic base subtly balanced and eurhythmic. In its tenderness and grace it is irresistibly affecting. In the peaceful appeal of the "Agnus Dei" the harp enters again with the suggestion of celestial light.

In the "Libera Me" the choir is led by barytone solo in a pure and humble supplication. The entrance of a strophe from the "Dies Irae" is marked by tremulous fear which is soothed by a reprise in unison on the octave of the imploring melody of the opening lines. This is the only passage expressing terror of judgment or alluding to the divine wrath. Elsewhere the "Requiem" is pervaded with a feeling of mansuetude and serenity which reaches exaltation in the concluding "In Paradisum."

Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey presents Bidu Sayao, soprano, and Igor Gorin, barytone, in a joint recital Sunday afternoon in Constitution Hall. Accompanists: Milne Charnley and Adolf Baller.

A cordial audience welcomed the return of Bidu Sayao for another recital in Constitution Hall yesterday afternoon and expanded hospitality to include Igor Gorin, Ukrainian barytone, who shared the program with her. The Brazilian soprano, svelte as a canna lily in a flame-colored gown, was in excellent voice, apparently refreshed by her participation in "Le Nozze di Figaro" at the Metropolitan the day before. The grace of her phrasing, the artistry of her readings and the suave clarity of her high pianissimo were enjoyable factors in her singing.

Mme. Sayao's rapid rise to popularity in this country has nothing fictitious about it, and she has honestly earned her reward by the refinement of her art. Her voice has a delectable quality, and her intelligent use of it is evidenced in every song. She knows the value of a delicate tone and she can produce one unerringly, while she controls the full power of her voice with admirable tact.

Her first group brought forward two unfamiliar airs in Lully's "Revenez, armours" and Gluck's "Chant de la Naiade," after which she fell back upon the tried and true "Nel cor piu non mi sento" of Paisiello and the florid flights of "Caro nome."

Igor Gorin made a good impression on the audience with his resonant and ample voice. In a certain naivette of interpretation and in the rather blunt robustness of his delivery, he was a foil for the subtleties of Mme. Sayao. The timbre of his voice varies little in color shading and tends to be monotonous for that reason. He has plenty of breath, but frequently takes it in places awkward for the integrity of phrases.

He opened the recital with Francesco Cavalli's "Troppe soavi i gusti" and followed this with Paradies' "M'he preso all sua ragna" and the aria, "Ah, per sempre" from Bellini's "I Puritani." For an extra number he sang "Piccola zingara" from Leoncavallo's "Zaza."

The remainder of the program was not heard by this reviewer, who had to hasten to another scene. According to the printed list, Mme. Sayao sang "Ah, fors e lui" and a group of lyrics by Ronald, Watts, Longas and Obradors, while Mr. Gorin contributed "Nemico della patria" from Giordano's "Andrea Chenier," lyrics by Grachaninov and Chaikovski, and two folk songs. There were also duets from "Le Nozze di Figaro" and "Rigoletto."

The resolution urged the need of safeguards to preserve the sovereignity and autonomy of the Indian states ruled largely by princes. The Indian national congress, led by Mohandas Gandhi is opposed to the existence of such states in a free India.

2 Brothers Found Dead in Gas Tank

Onley, Va., March 10 (AP).—Twin brothers, John and William White, 18, were found dead today in a gasoline storage tank after one apparently had given his life in an attempt to rescue the other.

A rope, tied around the waist of John and dangling from the man hole of the almost-empty tank, attracted the attention of Herbert Rew, an employe of the Watson Texaco Company, who was making a routine visit to the plant.

Ballet Russe Sees Capital In 20 Minutes, but Will Be Back

Members of the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo Company that Washington generally excitedly sees from seat edges, yesterday saw Washington while relaxed on their elbows in train seats, en route from the South to Baltimore.

The rhythm of interpretative motion that their performances suggests might be with them on stage and off was lost in the listless attitudes of train travelers. Their manager, too, said they had been working very hard.

Among them were Leonide Massine "He has that keen intelligence," said Diaghileff of his pupil, Massine, "that understands things before one says them;" Alexandra Danilova (this is her seventh consecutive year with the ballet); Alicia Markova (inheritor of the roles of Anna Pavlowa); Mina Slavenska (who has danced professionally since the age of 5), and a serious young artist, Roland Guerard, who once rushed copy for the New York Times, and who said his brother, John Jacob Guerard, was in the Federal Communications Commission here.

They stopped here only 20 minutes, but will be back Tuesday for engagements that night and Wednesday with the National Symphony Orchestra at Constitution Hall.

The trip through the South afforded Guerard opportunity to stop off at his home town, Flat Rock, N. C., which he left at the age of 9. His career, which includes accounting and law and the study of chemical engineering, had carried him to Europe, for his start, to South America, to Australia and to Russia, where he was the first American dancer to make his mark in Russian ballet company.

His advice to neophytes: "Work hard, then get an audition and give it everything you have." If any talent is there, some good organization will recognize it, he said.

Greek Church Archbishop Extols Prince

Athenian Envoy Among 1,000 Attending Requiem Service

More than 1,000 members of Washington's Hellenic community yesterday heard the head of the Greek Church in the Americas extol the late Prince Christopher, of Greece.

Filling the Greek Orthodox Church of Saints Constantine and Helen, Sixth and C streets southwest, the worshippers were reminded by the gray-bearded Archbishop Spyron Athenagoras that the Prince was loyal to duties of church and state.

Following Greek custom, the services of requiem mass were held near a white oval sugar-coated loaf of boiled wheat, adorned with a miniature crown. The loaf rested upon a black-draped table flanked by tall, black-ribboned candles. The wheat—token of respect to the dead—was eaten by the congregation after the rites.

Shortly before the archbishop spoke, Georgia Polymenakou and Evelyn Kokokiou presented floral bouquets to the wife of the Greek Minister on behalf of the church school, embracing her. Miss Katherine Fragako, also of the school, welcomed the archbishop, kissing his hand.

Greek Minister Attends

The Greek Minister, Kimon Diamantopoulos, also spoke briefly at the rites, which were attended by the Legation's Counselor and Mme. Depasta, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Koundouriotis, of the Legation; V. I. Chebithes, supreme president of the Ahepa Order, and brother members, and Soterios Nicholson, prominent local Greek churchman and lawyer.

The Rev. Archimandrake Ierotheos Stavrou, aide to the archbishop at the archdiocesan headquarters in New York City, served as deacon of the mass, and the Rev. Thomas Daniels, pastor of Saint Constantine and Helen Church, assisted. George Papas, president of the church's board of trustees, handled arrangements for the exercises.

The services followed the Greek custom of celebrating a mass for repose of the soul 40 days after death. The Prince, Christopher, died in Greece on January 21.

Staunton Man Killed On Jefferson Highway

He died in the hospital here at 5:15 a. m. of a fractured skull and broken leg. He was the son of Mrs. Cora L. Nutty, Staunton widow.

Yen to Roam Stronger Than Police Cookies

JOHNNY POUIF.

Spring wanderlust hit three-year-old Johnny Pouif yesterday. The tow-headed lost boy was found by a policeman at North Capitol street and Florida avenue and taken to the Women's Bureau.

But a handful of cookies and a large sheet of paper to scrawl upon failed to cure his wanderlust. He was out of a back door and running down the block before a pursuing policewoman caught up with him.

Returned to a chair too large for him and more cookies than he could eat, he became philosophical and started to sing. His song was not tuneful but it stirred members of the bureau into looking into their records.

Johnny, it seemed, had been there before. The wanderlust hits him in summer, autumn and winter, as well as in spring. His parents at 203 S street northeast were notified and he was returned to his home.

Cruiser Wichita Docked To Eliminate 'Kinks'

Philadelphia, March 10 (AP).—The 10,000-ton cruiser Wichita, commissioned at the Navy Yard here a year ago, returned home from a Caribbean cruise today for repairs.

The Wichita will go into drydock immediately so shipbuilders can iron out "kinks" that developed during her shakedown voyage. Naval officers said the cruiser has no serious troubles but does not run as smoothly as desired at top speed.

Song Services Bring Tidings Of Easter to D. C. Churches

Capital churchgoers yesterday had a music-studded preview of Palm Sunday and Easter, as special programs were heard in several churches.

The Greensboro (North Carolina) College Glee Club was heard at Francis Asbury Methodist Church, 3146 Sixteenth street northwest, under the sponsorship of the North Carolina State Society and the Greensboro College Alumni Association.

Directed by Walter Vassar, the girls sang, among other things, the "Sanctus," from Gounod's "St. Cecilia's Mass." Miss Jean Stamper was soprano soloist.

The girls, also sang Negro spirituals, including "Goin' Home" from the largo of The New World symphony.

Dr. Robin S. Gould, host pastor, welcomed the girls and their sponsors.

Later in the day, the choir of All Saints' Episcopal Church, Chevy Chase Circle, sang at Hamline Methodist Church under the auspices of the District of Columbia Organized Bible Class Association. William H. Taylor directed. About the same hour, the Chancel Choir of Covenant-First Presbyterian Church, conducted by Theodore Schaefer, presented Gabriel Faure's "Requiem" for the first time in this city. Sylvia Meyer, harpist with the National Symphony Orchestra, assisted.

The choir of Arlington Hall Junior College sang at Foundry Methodist Church, where Dr. Carl C. Rasmussen, pastor of Luther Place Memorial Church, was guest speaker.

Deputies to Ask France Send Army to Finns

Blum and Others To Demand Daladier Act Without Request

By John Elliott

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc

Paris, March 10.—The movement in favor of sending an Anglo-French expeditionary force to Finland if the Helsinki government appeals for aid gained perceptibly in this country today.

The demand for direct and immediate aid for Finland will be put squarely up to Premier Daladier by leading politicians, including former Premier Blum, in the Chamber of Deputies Tuesday. This sitting is likely to be so important that there is already talk of its being held as an executive (secret) session, as was the recent debate on the conduct of the war.

The cry for military assistance to the Finns is coming from all political parties in France. Of the four interpellations that are being raised in the Chamber this week two come from the left and two from the right.

Gen. Duval for Action

Blum demands an expeditionary force along the lines of the Allied force to Salonika in the World War which made the offensive that started the crumbling of the Central Powers. Blum's demand finds support in certain military circles in this country, notably Gen. Marie Victor Duval, who in the Journal des Debats urges that an Allied expeditionary force land at Petsamo.

Jean Fernand-Laurent, Rightist Deputy went even further and urges in Le Jour that the Allies should send troops to help Finland without waiting for a formal invitation from the Helsinki government.

War on Russia Urged in Britain

By James B. Reston

Copyright by New York Times

London, March 10.—Peace apparently was the topic of much of the diplomatic conversation in Moscow, Berlin, Rome and Stockholm over the week-end, but London was buzzing with rumors of war—war on a much wider front, and perhaps war with Russia.

Though it is known that British and French officials have discussed for some time the advisability of declaring war on Russia, the possibility of a dictated Russian peace in Finland has forced them to reconsider this adventure in the most urgent and serious way during the past few days.

There is a growing realization here that if Finland is forced to give up the Karelian Isthmus, the ports of Hangoe and Petsamo and to demilitarize the Aaland Islands—and it can be stated authoritatively that these demands have been made—not only Finland but the whole of Scandinavia would fall under Russo-German domination.

This would have an immediate and detrimental effect on the Allied cause. Russia would be able to cooperate by sending oil and other war materials to Germany and Germany would be in a position to demand all the iron ore she likes in northern Sweden.

For some time certain members of the British cabinet, reasoning that perhaps the only way to beat Germany is to cut off her supplies of iron ore and oil, have urged the Allies to go to any length, even to war against Russia, to keep Germany from securing these supplies of ore and oil, and it now appears their views are gaining force as Finnish resistance weakens.

In the News of the World today is an article by Leslie Hore-Belisha urging the Allies to make war on Russia now.

Hore-Belisha was one of that group of cabinet members who have urged war against Russia for months, and such views were supported if not inspired by many French officials.

War against Russia, in this group's view, could be undertaken without much fear of serious Russian retaliation. It is admitted the Soviet may either try to attack Allied forces in the Middle East, bomb Allied oil spplies in Iraq or even attempt an expedition against India, but there is complete confidence even among those British officials who do not favor war against Soviet Russia that any such Russian attacks could be driven off.

At the same time this group argues that Great Britain and France with their growing forces in the Middle East could relieve the pressure on the Finns in the north by attacking Russia in the south and might simultaneously manage to capture Russian oilfields in Baku from where the Germans hope to get oil later in the war.

An Allied campaign against Russia in the south, too, it is argued, might draw Germany into the fighting in that sector and thus force the Nazis to use up their limited supplies.

Wheel chairs are lined up near the unknown soldier's memorial in Berlin. Earlier, Hitler had sounded a war cry of "On to victory" in a brief address to observe Germany's memorial day. This photo was transmitted from Berlin to New York by radio.

permeated with confidence and pride.

Of particular significance, were his words that the achievements "of the great statesmen and army leaders of the past were no greater than those expected of us today."

"Scarcely one of the great battles of history bore visible evidence of its success or failure within itself at the outset," he said.

"Many an action which, judged from point of view of numbers and material, should have ended in defeat because its leaders lacked the spirit to win, and many others which, according to all human calculations were foredoomed to destruction, were later entered into history as most glorious victories.

"Nations are weighed in the spirit of their soldiers, either found wanting and stricken from the book of life and history, or found to be worthy of bearing new life. Our nation, with its difficult geographical and political situation was saved again and again only through the heroic actions of its men. We have lived for 2,000 years only because there were always men ready to stake all, if necessary to sacrifice all, for the common weal. But these heroes did not give their lives thinking thereby to free later generations of like obligation.

"The achievements of the past would all be in vain if a single generation were lacking in strength or unwilling to make equal sacrifices.

"The world desires our dissolution. Our only reply can be the greatest pledge of all times: on to victory," he said.

He looked paler and more solemn than usual and in keeping with the solemnity of the occasion indulged in no oratorical fireworks. More emotion crept into his voice, however, when he said.

"As Fuehrer of the nation, as chief of state, as supreme commander of the armed forces I live for but one task: Day and night to think of victory, struggle, work and fight for victory, if necessary not to spare my own life in the conviction that this time Germany's future will be secured for centuries.

Red Bombers Blast Hopes For Peace

through mediation of the government of Sweden."

Observers here were quick to note that it was the first time Moscow had recognized the Finnish government formed under Premier Ryti in the early days of the war. Russia maintained before the League of Nations that the only legal government of Finland was the Terijoki regime.

No mention was made in the brief communique when Premier Ryti and his delegation would return to Finland, but it was not considered likely they would remain away long. They left here Wednesday evening, the communique said. Other members of the delegation were Dr. Juho Paasikivi, head of the Finnish delegation in the fruitless Moscow negotiations last fall, Gen. Karl Rudolf Walden, and Vaino Voionmaa, a member of parliament.

The feeling has persisted in informed quarters here since the peace move first was discussed four days ago that the Soviet proposals were unacceptable and more severe than those of last fall, rejection of which was followed by the Russian invasion.

Many Finns have expressed themselves as ready and anxious to fight it out for what they believe to be their rights. There has been no indication in Finland of a rising sentiment for a peace settlement which would give the Russians what they unsuccessfully had demanded.

There has been, however, a strong feeling that the rest of the world should do more to assist what Finns call the republic's "defense of civilization."

In this connection there has been suspicion and resentment at Sweden's part in the current activities.

"Wait and See" Attitude

It was held certain among informed Finns that any proposals which were deemed threatening the republic's independence last fall would be considered in the same light today—and rejected. But since there was no official word as to the Russian plan, the attitude tonight was "wait and see."

Yesterday's daily high command communique, covering activities of yesterday, reported bitter fighting on virtually every front, with many Russians being killed.

The Finnish air force was said to have "bombed and fired on" enemy troops "and groups and columns of tanks, trucks and sledges observed on (the ice of) the Gulf of Finland."

On the Karelian Isthmus near the center of the Mannerheim Line, Russian atacks were repulsed in day-long fighting which left the ice of the Vuoksi river "covered with piles of corpses," the statement said.

Press Attacks Continue

Moscow, (Monday) March 11 (AP).—Attacks on the government of Finland headed by Premier Risto Ryti continued today in the Russian press.

(Russia's censorship forbade any discussion of the peace negotiations under way in Moscow or of the pressure of Premier Ryti and his delegation in the Capital.)

The following quotation from the Moscow newspaper Trud, organ of the trade unions, was typical of press comments:

"Our glorious Red army is fighting the White Finns in order to insure the safety of Leningrad and the entire U. S. S. R., liquidating a most important war base and helping the toilers of Finland free themselves from the Mannerheim-Tanner bloody band of Anglo-French servants."

Aerial Propaganda Raid

London, March 10 (AP).—A Moscow radio announcer in a talk for Red army troops tonight declared that "the day is not remote when the Finnish people with the help of the Red army will annihilate the blood-stained Mannerheim gang and will begin a new and happy life."

"The war bloc and the English-French imperialists have for 20 years attempted to draw the Soviet Union into a war," said the announcer, "but their attempts will be foiled."

Sweden Hopes for Peace Despite Attack on Ryti

New Karelian Frontier Is Reported Sought in Soviet Demands on Finns, Which Stockholm Hears Are Less Severe

By the Associated Press

Stockholm (Monday), March 11.—Reports that Russia had offered Finland a new Karelian Isthmus frontier, which would leave the city of Viipuri in Finland, but would put a large part of the Mannerheim Line in Russian territory, came today from informed sources.

Despite a Moscow broadcast attacking Premier Risto Ryti, of Finland, now heading the delegation of Finnish negotiators in Moscow, Swedish and Danish newspapers expressed optimism that the negotiations were on the eve of success.

Sources here said the proposed new frontier would run from Taipale, on Lake Ladoga, to Summa.

(The Red army has hammered unsuccessfully at Taipale since the war began. Summa fell last month.)

Far-Northern Petsamo would remain Finnish, as would the Port of Hanko, on the southwestern tip of Finland, but the Russians would keep islands in the Bay of Finland.

(These reported terms were far less severe than demands said to have been made earlier in the negotiations by the Russians. Their terms then allegedly included Petsamo and Hanko, Viipuri and all of the Karelian Isthmus.

Swedish diplomats, convinced they had done all in their power to promote peace between Finland and Russia, awaited the outcome amid a growing belief that the war may spread through Scandinavia unless it is ended abruptly.

Fear was expressed in some circles that Sweden's attempts to act as peacemaker might be offset by talk of military aid for Finland from the western powers.

Odds on Peace Better

Copyright by New York Times

Stockholm, March 10.—Betting odds in favor of peace in Finland went up in best-informed circles here today when the Finnish government officially admitted that a peace delegation had been in Moscow since Thursday.

It was noteworthy, however, that the peace feelers had not lessened the recruiting of volunteers in Sweden, and that recruiting has increased in the last few days.

The factors which seem to make for peace are:

That the Finnish military position, while strong, seems bound to deteriorate.

That the practicability of quick British or French help on a large scale is questionable.

That Fuehrer Hitler may be bringing pressure on Russia to moderate her terms to insure peace in the Baltic.

It is still asserted here that if the negotiations fail Sweden will change her policy in the direction of much more active help to Finland though probably not to the extent of sending the Swedish army.

Other Treaties Possible

Stockholm, March 10 (U.P.).—Neutral diplomats predicted tonight that if Finnish-Russian peace negotiations are successful, they most likely will be followed by other discussions between Finland and her Scandinavian and German neighbors, predicated upon Finland's desire for guarantees of her future independence.

The Finns were believed to have had some indication of how far other nations were prepared to go in such guarantees before they went to Moscow.

Soviet-Japanese Antiwar Pact Reported Studied

Paris (Monday), March 11 (U.P.).—Reliable informants said today they had information from Tokyo that Japan and Russia are attempting to negotiate a nonaggression treaty.

The negotiations were taking place in Moscow in connection with conversations which have been under way for weeks for a Russo-Japanese trade treaty, it was said.

Japan, according to the informants, is willing to conclude the nonaggression agreement—which Russia will agree to cease all assistance to the Chinese nationalist government in Chungking, and recognize the independence of Japan's ally, Manchukuo, in return for which Japan would recognize Russia's special interest in northwest (Sinkiang).

Russian counterproposals were said to include Japanese recognition of the independence of Russia's Outer Mongolian protectorate, the Russo-German partition of Poland and the need for demilitarization of the Manchukuo-Siberian borders.

Tobey Would Be A Census Martyr, Pepper Charges

Senator Pepper (Democrat, Florida), said last night Senator Tobey (Republican, New Hampshire), was seeking to become a "martyr" by refusing to answer income questions in the 1940 census.

Tobey is author of a resolution to eliminate personal income questions from the census.

"The Senator will not get the chance to go to jail," Pepper's statement said. "The enumerator who contacts him will know that the Senator's salary is more than $5,000, so the enumerator will need simply to make an entry '$5,000 plus' and the 'snooping' desires of the census will be satisfied."

He said Tobey had given "evidence of either deliberately misrepresenting the census questions or of being unable to understand the questions as printed on the schedule."

be produced during the year. It means, according to Army sources, that the War Department will allow the Curtiss factory to accept orders for the same model from the Allied purchasing mission.

The Army officials added that there would not be any delay in the delivery of Army orders because of Allied orders, as the planes now under construction for the United States were so far advanced that the Curtiss Company could take on the additional orders without delay from having to increase their production facilities.

Several days ago the Allied purchasing mission indicated that France and Great Britain wished to purchase a total of 3,000 pursuit planes in the United States. Just how many of these will be of the new model was not revealed last night.

The Allied purchasing mission asked for the release of not only the Curtiss P-40, but also of the faster and more recent Bell Aircobra, which recently developed speeds far in excess of 440 miles per hour in tests. The Army has thus far not permitted the sale of the Aircobra model.

The desire of the Allies to obtain American models was reported to have been greatly increased since they witnessed the performance of American aircraft in fighting in Europe.

Chamberlain May Receive Welles Today

Envoy Sees Halifax; Told British Still Insist Hitler Go, Says Report

By the Associated Press

London, March 10.—United States Undersecretary of State Welles, arriving here at noon today from Paris on his fact-finding tour of European capitals, conferred for an hour with Foreign Secretary Lord Halifax as the prelude to a series of formal talks with government and opposition leaders.

Authoritative sources described Welles' meeting with Lord Halifax in the latter's suite in the Dorchester Hotel as purely informal, but said the foreign secretary had emphasized that the "security for which Britain went to war" remains the keystone of her war aims.

Present at the conference was United States Ambassador Kennedy, who greeted Welles as he stepped from the plane which brought him from Paris.

Sees Premier Today

Also on hand to greet President Roosevelt's emissary were Sir Alexander Cadogan, permanent undersecretary for foreign affairs, and Lord Halifax's secretary. After a round of hand-shaking Welles was whisked to the Dorchester, where a suite had been reserved for him, two floors below that occupied by the foreign secretary.

It was expected that Welles would meet Prime Minister Chamberlain tomorrow and confer later with leaders of the Liberal and Labor opposition. He is also to have an audience with King George VI during his visit, and will meet the cabinet at a private dinner arranged by the prime minister.

Diplomatic sources said they believed the Russian-Finnish situation would be touched upon "only casually" at the forthcoming conferences.

"This Government believes that Mr. Welles is interested primarily in the war in the west," one informant declared.

It was indicated that government leaders would elaborate Britain's war aims for Welles, especially since British diplomatic circles cling to the belief that he is in Europe to sound out the warring powers on the minimum terms for peace negotiations.

Informed sources said Britain still stands by the objectives outlined by Chamberlain February 24:

First, establishment of a German government which can be trusted "to keep its word to foreign governments and to its own people."

Second, "independence of the Poles and Czechs must be secured."

So far as Poland and Czecho-Slovakia are concerned, the government has made no attempt to delineate their post-war boundaries.

Russia Complicates Problem

Formation of these boundaries, an official of a neutral embassy pointed out, would be "inevitably complicated" by the Russian occupation of Eastern Poland and British acquiescence to the 1938 transfer of the Sudetenland to Germany.

These persons emphasized a post-war "dismemberment of Germany" policy, believed by authoritative sources to be gaining converts in French government and military circles, has not been accepted here.

"It is quite probable at the conclusion of the war," one foreign office source declared, however, "that Bavaria might wish to withdraw from the union with Prussia and unite with Austria."

Finally, although the subject of a postwar European federation has often been discussed, it was intimated that Welles would be told by Chamberlain that such talk is "premature."

However, the prime minister has indicated that extension of French-British cooperation might be considered after the war.

Nationalist members of the Northern Ireland Parliament who seek to end British rule in Ulster, asked the United States Embassy today to procure an interview with Welles.

The embassy replied that the request would be brought to Welles' attention but it was impossible to say whether he would be able to receive them.

3 I. R. A. Members Hunted by Police

Dublin, March 10 (AP).—Northern Ireland police joined Eire civic guards tonight in a search for three armed Irish Republican army "terrorists" who reportedly stormed aboard Eire's first warship, flung the deck guard overboard and escaped in a rowboat despite heavy firing.

The Eire government issued a statement declaring that "no importance is attached to the incident."

The warship, the M 1—a 50-knot motor torpedo boat—is the first of six torpedo boats ordered from Britain for Eire's coastal guard.

Praises Ecclesiastical Life in America And California Weather; Will Preach Next Sunday in Old Christ Church

The Most Rev. John William Charles Wand, archbishop of Brisbane, Australia, warmed himself in George Washington's church in Alexandria yesterday and remarked that the windy Virginia spring is "too cold for the thin blood of an Australian."

The archbishop is nearing the end of a two-month tour of America that was to have led him to the decennial Lambeth Conference of Anglican Bishops in London in June. Though the conference, has been postponed on account of the war he continued with his tour and preached at Washington Cathedral last month.

Two things chiefly interested him, he said, ecclesiastical life in America and the California climate. California is the "opposite number" of Queensland, the state where Brisbane is situated, he explained. Though they have more rainfall in Queensland, it is not so well conserved, so the archbishop was "anxious to see what California has done with irrigation."

"We want to do the same kind of thing, but we haven't the immense wealth to draw on they have in California," he said.

Training of the clergy is more highly developed in America than Australia, he commented. "Your seminary training is probably better than anywhere else in the Anglican communion," he said. He also admired the efficiency of the office administration in American churches.

He praised the new Australian minister to the United States, Richard Gardiner Casey, as "one of the ablest men in Australia." Casey does a lot of flying and always flies his own plane at home, the Archbishop said, "but I don't know whether he'll do that here."

Archbishop Wand will devote most of this week to resting from the exertions of a crowded tour as the guest of the Rev. Edward Randolph Welles, rector of Christ Church, Alexandria. He will preach there at 11 a. m. next Sunday, and members of the staff of the Australian Legation will hear him from George Washington's family pew.

Organizer Urged Communists Unite In U. S., Mexico

El Paso, Tex., March 8 (U.P.).—Secret organization of a combination Mexican-American branch of the Communist Party was advocated in a letter read today into the records of a court of inquiry investigating Communist activities.

The letter, addressed to the Communist Party of Mexico, was signed "Frank Sener, organizer for the northwest region of Texas, appointed by the State committee of the Communist Party of Texas."

Sener, arrested last Tuesday, admitted writing the letter.

Investigator George Hurley, Washington, of the Dies Committee, was an observer but said he would conduct a separate inquiry.

Reynolds Seeks Quota On Latin Immgirants

Raleigh, N. C., March 10 (AP).—Charging aliens were buying birth certificates through Central and South American diplomatic sources, Senator Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, said today he planned to introduce a bill this week establishing an immigration quota system for the Western Hemisphere.

"A person in a foreign country," Reynolds said, "recently went to a diplomatic agent in Haiti. He paid $5,000 and when he came to Haiti he received a birth certificate. Under the law, all natural born citizens of the Western Hemisphere may enter the United States unrestricted."

Treasury Dupes Public on Silver, Townsend Says

Seator Townsend (Republican), of Delaware, contended yesterday that the Government was using silver to pay off obligations at 27 cents on the dollar.

The Delaware Republican, who long has urged repeal of the silver purchase act, said in a statement that this situation resulted from the fact that the "world price" of silver is 35 cents an ounce.

"With silver at 35 cents an ounce," his statement continued, "$1 will buy about 2.86 ounces of the metal. When the Treasury buys silver it buys it with silver certificates. . . .

"Against each $1 silver certificate, according to law, the Treasury must set aside about three-fourths of an ounce of silver. At the 'world price' three-fourths of an ounce is today worth only about 27 cents.

"In other words, the $1 silver certificate is today redeemable not in a dollar's worth of silver,, as many people think, but only 27 cents' worth."

Desert Stretch and Single Bomb-Proof Fortress Guards 'Backdoor to Egypt'

By Frazier Hunt

International News Service Staff Writer

Camp Matruh, Egypt, March 10.—They call this great fortified camp on the shore of the Mediterranean 200 miles west of Alexandria "The Backdoor of Egypt." It is still almost 150 miles more of desert to the frontier of Italian Libya.

This last stretch is undefended but soldiers are not needed—the waterless desert is sufficient defense against any land attack. Only from the air could Italy's Marshal Balbo, governor of Libya, hope to conquer the desert and manage to get at most a few thousand troops as far as Suez in an African blizkrieg.

It is difficult to picture the immensity of this desert. A single hard road parallels the sea from Alexandria. Driving westward, there are a few towns on the water for about 50 miles, then no towns, no oases, nothing but desert.

South of the highway is a railroad ending at Matruh but the highway goes on to the border, always within range of warship guns.

The Romans once used Matruh with its beautiful little bay as a summer resort. The wells the Romans used as still in use. The settlement of Matruh was reborn when the British army built roads through the desert as a military precaution against the possibility of an attempted Italian invasion of Egypt.

It's a typical motion picture desert fortress but instead of the weary Foreign Legion here are the battalions of guard regiments, Royal engineers, sappers, regulars, artillery and above the air fighters playing tag in the blue sky.

For three years, the British and Egyptians in cooperation have been adding to their desert defences. They now have concrete pillboxes reminiscent of the Maginot Line, deep permanent dugouts, and great stores of supplies.

An enemy air attack could conceivably cut off supplies from the east and destroy both the highway and railroad from Alexandria, but the fortress itself is bombproof and could hold out for weeks and months.

Guard States View

An attacking force on land would have no water from the Lybian border to here and their long line of communications would be open to attack by the British mechanized forces. South of here there are hundreds of miles of nothing but waterless desert.

A young guards officer put it thus:

"We'd ask nothing better than to draw the enemy inside the desert, if they should attack, then hold them up, cut off their supplies and let them try to survive."

The reader might ask what has all this to do with the war in Europe. It has considerable to do with it because it gravely affects the safety of Suez and the entire Allied Near East military organization.

The high command here feels it is unsafe to overlook the slightest possibility of a sudden change in the Italian attitude, bringing an attack from Libya across the desert toward Alexandria and Suez.

It is the most remote possibility, but soldiers do not dare overlook anything.

Nazi Air Scouts Raise Alarm In North France

Paris, March 10 (AP).—Northern France was held under an air raid alarm for one and one-half hours today during a spurt in German and Allied war activity.

On the Western Front land forces engaged in several encounters during which German patrols, the high command reported, "had to fall back under our fire."

In London, the air ministry announced British planes had carried out "successful reconnaissance flights" over Vienna and Prague again last night.

The German high command communique on yesterday's events reported "considerable artillery and patrol activity," and said the Nazi air force made reconnaissance flights over eastern France.

Army to Play War In Panama Proper

Panama, March 10.—Territory of the Republic of Panama will be the scene of a "battle" in defense of the Panama Canal early this week when maneuvers of mobile forces of the United States Army will be carried off here under command of Brig. Gen. Ben Lear.

The attacking force commanded by Col. Louis P. Ford will consist of the Fifth Infantry Regiment, which crossed the Canal today to take up a position in the interior of Panama. Col. Ford will attempt to reach the canal locks or other vital points.

The main defense force consists of the Thirty-third Infantry, with the Fourteenth Infantry in reserve.

A Census Revolt?

There is no doubt about the economic value of a census of income that would throw light on the buying power of American families in different parts of the country. Such information would greatly aid businessmen in planning sales campaigns. The director of the census, W. L. Austin, states that trade associations, chambers of commerce, advertising agencies, and marketing experts have long urged inclusion in the census of questions relating to individual incomes. Economists, too, have felt the need of more accurate information about wages and salaries.

Demands for a housing census likewise have come from business organizations connected with the housing industry, housing officials, and heads of organized labor.

If the census-takers prove to be "snoopers," as Senator Tobey fears, their prying will be largely the result of pressure from groups that can and will make legitimate use of the results.

The most valid objections raised by census critics are directed not against the questions, but against the questioners. The fact that enumerators are political appointees, sometimes suspected of using information for ulterior purposes, is a very serious matter. That weakness of the system raises a question as to how far the Census Bureau should go in asking searching or intimate questions.

The elaborate nature of the housing questionnaire is also open to criticism. For it is certain to result in errors and omissions due to the inability of many of those interrogated to make correct answers. It is obvious that the fewer and simpler the questions asked the higher will be the percentage of accurate replies.

Senator Tobey might have made a very telling attack upon the intricacy of census inquiries, without challenging the good faith of the authorities. He could also have properly emphasized the undesirability of demanding answers to certain detailed or intimate questions on pain of fine or imprisonment for failure to answer. Such temperate criticism might have resulted in the omission of certain inquiries or in their placement on a list of questions to be voluntarily answered.

Unfortunately, the Senator has chosen to incite people to refuse to answer by standing upon an assumed "constitutional" right of privacy. In thus arousing public suspicion and resentment, he has done irreparable damage. For the census-takers can succeed in their work only if they have the willing cooperation of those interrogated.

Many people ordinarily quite willing to give that cooperation have become convinced that there is something sinister and un-American about inquiring into their private affairs. As a result, the work of assembling basic data may be seriously hampered regardless of whether Congress acts on specific controversial questions.

War And Age

There is an interesting commentary on our times in the recall to active service of five British admirals previously retired because of old age. Henceforth, says the official order, these men are to be on the active list for life.

In the popular understanding, war and youth go together and have done so since time immemorial. It is the young who have always been called upon to do the fighting and the dying. There is no place in war, according to this popular belief, for the old, no matter how vigorous they may be.

That may have been true in the past. It is certainly not so today. Now it is in time of peace that the old appear most unwanted. Then many still in the full bloom of life, with their faculties unimpaired, are thrown on the scrap heap, derelicts of the machine age.

But war, on the contrary, absorbs the energies of all age levels. There is none so old, as the recall of the five British admirals suggests, that his training, experience and ability can be regarded as useless by his country. These old men may, to be sure, be unable to withstand the rigors of the trenches or the quarterdeck. But war, in the modern sense, is far more than fighting. The armies are only the spearheads of a vast national effort.

There is no essential reason why this same rule could not be applied in time of peace. No nation is so rich that it can be prodigal of its human resources. No nation enjoys such abundance that those who have been trained in innumerable skills can be disregarded because they have reached a certain age. War is fearfully wasteful. But in this particular war it is less wasteful than peace.

Threat Of Sabotage

Only a general-election year could have produced the furor which broke out in the Senate last week over the supplementary Hatch Bill. That measure prescribes no new policy. It is in no respect drastic. Indeed, it is a relatively mild effort to extend the ban on corrupt politics set up in the original Hatch Act. Yet it is being vehemently denounced as an invasion of States' rights and of individual liberty.

A more propitious time could well have been selected to bring this bill before the Senate. Now that the issue has been joined, however, the Senate has only one reasonable course—to conclude its debate without undue delay and enact the bill. The principle it involves has been well established. In passing the Social Security Act, for example, Congress provided that the States may obtain Federal funds only when they have set up merit standards for the selection of employes who will be paid by those funds. As Senator Wagner pointed out, this measure was passed almost unanimously. It was taken for granted that Congress should prevent the misuse of social security funds for political purposes.

Without going so far as to require State merit systems, the Hatch bill would simply forbid political activity by State employes paid wholly or in part with Federal money. An amendment by Senator O'Mahoney, which the Senate has adopted, would eliminate the question of drastic penalties for States failing to comply with the act. Any State could employ any individual of its own choosing and permit that employe to play politics if it wished. But in those circumstances the Government would withhold twice the amount of the salary paid such individual from Federal money.

By this means Congress would merely make it unprofitable for a State to retain the leaders of political machines in offices to which Federal aid is contributed. It is not a question of interference by Washington in the internal affairs of local governments. Rather it is a question of denying use of Federal money for the support of Statehouse machines.

Senator Neely gave his colleagues a vivid insight into the extortion that is practiced in many State capitals. Employes are assessed a certain percentage of their salaries (often 2 per cent) for the support of political organizations. Refusal to contribute to these slush funds usually means dismissal of the employe. In other words, unscrupulous State politicians are taking a cut on salaries actually paid by the Federal Government.

Congress has no right to tell the States how they should manage their affairs. But it has a positive obligation to see that Federal money is not diverted to the use of political machines. While the Hatch Act might not fully achieve that purpose, it would be a vital step in the right direction.

Because of the commendable purpose of the bill few Senators have attacked it directly. Most of its opponents, like Senator Brown, prefer to saddle the measure with absurd amendments that would make its enactment unfeasible. The vote on the Brown amendment today should accurately test the strength of the Hatch Bill. This amendment would forbid political contributions and activities by corporation executives and stockholders who obtain benefits from any tariff or governmental lending agency. It would likewise penalize such individuals if they should attempt to obtain just settlement of tax controversies.

To be consistent the Senator should have included all farmers drawing benefits from the AAA and veterans entitled to Federal aid. But, of course, the proposed amendment is not to be taken seriously. It was intended for sabotage purposes only. The cause of good government will be effectively served if this attempt to confuse the issue is defeated so emphatically as to discourage similar opposition tactics.

Only A Start

District authorities have made a good start in combating the crime wave which broke out in Washington a fortnight ago. Emergency measures were taken by the police last week and officials appear to have reached agreement on several long-range objectives intended to thwart the progress of criminals in the District. Obviously, however, the conference on Saturday was only a first step.

No doubt the 125 extra policemen assigned to night duty since the city became aroused over the prevalence of crime have had a salutary influence upon thugs and hoodlums operating here. But the fresh outbreak of violent robberies on Saturday night and the continued operation of criminals yesterday should be sufficient warning that the problem has not been solved, not even temporarily. Additional policemen on the streets afford needed protection to crime-ridden areas. No one should suppose, however, that such an expedient will put the lawless element out of business.

Successful law enforcement must be gradually developed over a long period. Sudden spurts of activity against criminals are not likely to be effective if they have good reason to believe that official vigilance will soon relax and they will have a chance once more to prey upon the public. It is the relentless pursuit of criminals every day in the year and effective means of dealing with them when they are caught which give some cities good law-enforcement records.

By all means Washington needs more policemen. Probably, too, its vagrancy law ought to be strengthened as Commissioner Hazen's crime conference has suggested. But the problem does not end there. Even more urgently the city needs an esprit de corps in dealing with the problem. The progressive attitude which has induced District Attorney Pine to reduce to a minimum the delay in trying persons accused of crime could well be diffused throughout our law-enforcement agencies.

Too many of these agencies have been attending to their work in a sort of humdrum way with little effort to improve their records of last year or even a decade ago. Perhaps that is as much the fault of the community as a whole as it is of local officials. A civic awakening is needed. When the community is sufficiently aroused over its disgraceful crime record improvements can be made in this field as certainly as they have been made in the reduction of traffic accidents. Without such an aroused public sentiment, it is very questionable whether a new vagrancy law or even 125 additional policemen would give the city an effective law-enforcement system.

A Practical Relief Plan

Unemployment is unquestionably the major issue before the country today. It presents a problem which calls for the kind of honest, constructive thinking that Senator Robert A. Taft has evidently given to this important subject.

In a speech last week before the John Ericsson Republican League of Chicago Mr. Taft dissociated himself from those undiscriminating critics of the Administration who noisily denounce all its works. The Senator from Ohio gives the New Deal credit for "a great advance along humanitarian lines." He realizes that many millions of idle Americans have been saved from starvation through the intervention of the Federal Government, and he admits that the local governments require Federal financial aid in carrying the relief load.

Mr. Taft's criticism is directed chiefly against the Works Progress Administration. He charges that the WPA is "both expensive and inadequate." As a matter of political necessity, it operates in some areas where no relief is needed, while elsewhere the relief given is much below needs. Being a hybrid organization combining relief with public works, the WPA is exceptionally costly. And because of this great expense it is impossible for the Federal Government to provide jobs for all the millions of employable men in need of public assistance.

In common with many experts in the field of social service, Mr. Taft concludes, therefore, that the only way to deal comprehensively with the relief problem is to decentralize its administration, leaving the Federal Government to finance local relief systems by grants-in-aid. To qualify for such grants the States would have to set up acceptable relief plans, administered locally without political favoritism. As a protection against excessive reliance upon Federal funds the localities would also be required to make substantial contributions to relief expenditures.

There is nothing essentially partisan about plans to return responsibility for administration of relief to the localities where it properly belongs. The unwillingness of the present Administration to do so, as Mr. Taft notes, arises from a reluctance to surrender the political power and prestige resulting from a Federal work program.

In other fields in which Federal aid is needed, such as housing and medical care, Mr. Taft also advocates decentralized administration, with Federal financial assistance.

The Senator has shown excellent judgment in proceeding from a discussion of practicable reforms in the system of relief administration to demands for economy. Critics who simply call for reductions in relief outlays as a means of balancing the budget lay themselves open to charges of being indifferent to humanitarian considerations. Mr. Taft avoids that challenge by pointing out how the present system can be improved as well as rendered less costly.

Although he is not so optimistic as to believe that chronic unemployment can be eliminated, Mr. Taft concludes that we can go a long way toward solution of the unemployment problem if private industry is encouraged to expand instead of being hampered by increasing governmental regulation and interference. But pending absorption of the unemployed by a hoped for growth of industry, the country is confronted by needs which brook no delay. In outlining his plan to meet this problem Mr. Taft has manifested political courage as well as sound judgment.

It's a pity that a number of us don't take writer's cramp when we start to write a check for something we don't need.

"The country is bigger than the Democratic party," says a prominent Republican. Yes, but not much bigger.

A man who puts his head in a lion's mouth hasn't much to lose, anyway.

Against Legal Betting

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As one of the witnesses appearing before the subcommittee of the Senate District Committee when it held hearings on Senate Bill 1351, to reopen Benning race track, I would appreciate a little space in your columns for the sake of keeping the record straight.

The notes of the stenographer will show that Clinton N. Howard, superintendent of the International Reform Association; Henry N. Pringle, a life-long student of the gambling question; and the undersigned, presented testimony giving reasons why passage of S. 1361 would be inimical to the best business and social interests of the District of Columbia.

In the course of his remarks to the subcommittee, Commissioner Allen expressed wonderment that any businessmen would favor horse racing in the District and my testimony simply emphasized the fact "that enactment of the bill would constitute legalized exploitation of the weaknesses of many people for gambling in the name of revenue, which in the last analysis wouldn't be reflected in savings for the taxpayer."

Evidence was also presented showing that businessmen are not 100 per cent for legalized betting. Quotations were read from a report of the research department of the New Jersey State Chamber of Commerce containing numerous statements from groups and individuals to the effect that legal betting has been detrimental to legitimate business in the States where the pari-mutuel system prevails.

International Brigades

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In recent news items from Finland in your paper there have been several references made to the "international brigades" fighting with the Mannerheim forces. In order to avoid confusing the public mind between the progressive ideals for which the international brigades in Spain fought, and the reactionary, antiworking class policies which the "volunteers" with Mannerheim are fighting for, we wish to publicly dissociate ourselves, and emphatically so, from the so-called international brigades in Finland.

Our organization would not, under any circumstances, support the type of government which imprisoned Finnish volunteers of the international brigades in Spain who managed to return safely to their homeland. Baron Mannerheim has done this to Capt. Gunnar Ebb, along with others, with no legal justification.

K. K. K.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I see by the papers that the K. K. K. is back in masks again. They were recently pictured in Atlanta, protesting against American labor's efforts to organize for better pay in the South.

Does this new outbreak of Klansmen mean that civilization in America has reached such a low level that respectable citizens are willing to have men of questionable character and motives masquerade under the guise of Americanism? These masked arbiters of the law do not seek to save but, rather, to destroy democracy. Let us see the faces of those who cast stones!

What we need in this country is not the K. K. K., but more people who will open the Bible, read and follow the teachings of Christ. This will stop hate-rousing and head-hunting. Wake up, Americans. Look back and you will realize that hate, usually under the name of something else, has always been the most destructive force of progress. When we learn to live and love as did Christ, hate will vanish.

"Ships For Sale"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I note in The Post of March 1 a letter from Admiral Land, of the Maritime Commission, commenting on your editorial of February 19. The admiral's letter evades the pertinent questions raised in Senate Resolution 239, introduced by Mr. Clark, of Missouri.

The Clark resolution calls on the Maritime Commission to transmit to the Senate the following information in connection with the transfer of vessels owned by the United States Lines to Belgian registry: (a) the date of construction of such vessels and the cost thereof; (b) the date they were purchased by the United States Lines or any predecessor in interest, and the price paid therefor; (c) the amount of mail pay received for the operation of such vesels by the United States Lines or any predecessor in interest; (d) a complete recitation of the financial transactions involved in the transfer of the vessels; (e) a recitation of the facts showing whether control or interest is held by any American citizen in the Belgian company to which such transfer was made or in any successor in interest of such company; and (f) in general, all the information which would go to the bona fides of the transaction."

The C. I. O. Maritime Commission has tried without success to obtain the answer to these questions from the Maritime Commission. We believe that the American people are entitled to know these facts, and that it should not require an act of Congress to elicit them from a Government agency.

BJORNE HALLING,
Executive Secretary,

Hatch Act

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Hatch law restraining persons in the Government employ from self-perpetuating themselves in public office is wise.

But what difference in principle can be shown between political campaigning by a man who holds an office because he campaigned for it and a man who expects to hold the office because he is campaigning for it?

To put all officeholders, present and prospective, on an equal footing an amendment to the Hatch law should be voted by Congress as follows:

"No person other than a candidate for office who participates in a political campaign shall be eligible to any post in the United States Government, except in a policy-making position."

Those who are in politics for the offices all campaign in the same spirit. Why then discriminate against the ins in favor of the outs?

"Our Town In Pictures"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have carefully read your publication of "Our Town in Pictures" which appears in The Washington Post each Sunday. It has impressed me so much that I cannot rest until I write this letter telling you how full of gratitude I am and just how satisfied and elated I feel over your success in getting material for your pictures into the hands of the public.

Your aim to acquaint parents and the public in general with the activities in our schools is certainly being achieved, and I do feel that a much greater objective will be accomplished through your publications than you realize. Education, as you know, aims to inspire even the youngest child to press in—gain more knowledge and skill than he already has.

That is what we as teachers and educators are doing; trying to inspire our youth to get all the education they can in order to become worthwhile law-abiding citizens of today as well as in the future.

No right-thinking or well-thinking adult could have seen any of the pictures without having been deeply impressed with the activities and no doubt wish he or she were in school again. The boys and girls already in school observe them with a great degree of gratitude and pride, I am sure, feeling very happy to be numbered among those who are receiving this special recognition through your paper.

I feel that The Post has done and will do more than satisfy the groups mentioned. I am led to believe that it will reach out its arms, as it were, and gather in those who seemingly had no interest in school and dropped out, not necessarily because they could not be reached, but because they had not been made acquainted with the activities of school life on its secondary and higher levels of learning in their most healthy state.

They had no idea about the subject matter which would be theirs to discuss but they were evidently not inspired to be "tried in the fire" to see whether they would like it or not; thus they withdrew from school. The pictures portray the subject matter being presented so interestingly that I am sure some wayfaring students will be inspired to return to the fertile fields where knowledge is blooming.

I am confident that the pictures will inspire those already in school to continue and not be satisfied until their courses are completed. To my mind this inspiration of which I speak is the greatest value to all concerned.

Parents will be inspired and encouraged to send their children to school. Some parents who have felt that their children have been wasting time in school are being enlightened and will change their attitude and minds about the whole situation.

They will be more willing to become affiliated with groups or organizations which support our administrators who in turn present to the Congress the needs of our school with regard to adequate equipment and buildings and additional salaries for trained teachers to meet the needs of their children and our children who are in school and who want to return to school.

Our responsibilities are great as leaders of the youth and we need all the constructive help possible. The home and school must work together and I am sure your paper is doing an exceedingly fine job through its medium of spreading the good news about our schools.

May your staff be ever alert and successful in getting material of such great interest and inspiration. No one is ever successful in climbing unless he carries someone else up with him.

The Post Impressionist

Be He Ever So Humble

For years the public has been hearing and reading about the interesting work that is journalism, and has been literally stuffed to the ears with stories of reporters who are supposed to lead such adventurous lives. They do not, however, hear much about the men behind the scenes, the men who actually get out the paper, but who remain behind desks in the city room.

Although it will probably never be admitted, one of the most important of these unsung heroes is the lowly copy boy who is serving his apprenticeship for a reporter's berth. He does all the jobs which the rest of the [illegible] do not like to do, and is usually considered very dumb and very lazy by the rest of the staff.

They are so important to the smooth running of a newspaper, however, that an absence of two copy boys will cripple a paper more than the absence of a corresponding number of reporters. I would like to show, through the eyes of the copy boy, a sample of life as it is in the city room.

We consider ourselves the Big Three of the copy boy staff. And we sit rather smugly in our own little world and never admit that there is amongst us one who couldn't do a better job than any of the younger reporters.

Number one of the Big Three is the present dean of the group, and is truly an amazing person. He is so thin that turned sidewise he is rather difficult to see. About him there is a touch of what may be called greatness, and the longer you know him the more apparent it becomes. He put himself through college selling pots and pans and gets his master's degree in June. His only weak point seems to be that he once took a course in economics and has never touched earth since.

Now for the second member of the Big Three. He is thin and thinks he's nervous, but he isn't. He tries to gain weight, but he can't. He would like to know more about my women. He is the culture enthusiast of the group, and has a most remarkable knowledge of that elusive subject. He also knows a lot about women. That is, all except his own and mine.

Number three is me. I think I'm short, but I'm not. I am forever remarking that some girl could eat coconuts off the top of my head if she were so inclined, and I won't tell Big Three member two about my women, which makes him curious. I think I'm fat, but I'm thin and I really don't know very much about myself.

The Big Three will argue about anything, anywhere, anytime. We pass judgment on everything we see and we see everything. We're not very fond of the sports department . . . they never buy us any beers, and they're forever screaming for food and (or) drink. We think Tony is the smartest one in sports—he is a former copy boy.

We are the most independent members of the staff. If a reporter does not treat us with the proper respect he is out of luck. He will get no clippings from the morgue. He will get no papers or envelopes. He will starve before we will get him food. He may as well quit and we wish he would.

The boss' name is John, and we love him dearly even though he does make slighting remarks about our ancestors occasionally. He has a habit of waiting until we are very busy and then saying, "do this while you're resting." The staff thinks John is very clever. We think he is a black Irishman.

We love George, the slot man on the copy desk, too. George weighs 500 pounds and has a voice like a bull. We think George is pretty good, and we've thought so ever since we saw him do three men's work in one day. We love him mostly, though, because we can tell him where he can go when we feel like it without being fired.

We also like Hugh. Hugh is the photographic editor, and thinks everybody is conspiring against him. He doesn't think he's nervous, but he is. He can never find his photographers when he needs them, and we have to go out in the cold and search for them in all the beaneries. We like Hugh very much, but wish he'd stay in one place once in a while so we could find him when the boss wants him.

The ace reporter is Eddie, and we like him because he was once a copy boy. Eddie thinks he's calm, but he's nervous. He claims to be neutral, and will take either side of an argument. We like Eddie very much, but we wish that he'd get a haircut and stop pulling his hair when he writes. It makes us very nervous.

We don't like the electrician at all. When something goes wrong we call him on the telephone and he says he'll be right up. Then we wait, and wait, and wait. Finally we start to fix it ourselves, and just as we get started he rushes into the city room.

He rants and raves and wants to know who the electrician is, anyway, he or us?

At 7 o'clock each night the city room is like dinner time at the zoo. Then is when the night side comes to work, and the room is jammed full of men. Chaos reigns.

George bellows for proofs at 10 second intervals, and in the same voice wants to know where the blank blank boy is who went out for food. The financial editor comes in and states that his stock averages are missing again and what are we going to do about it.

We learned long ago that the best way to keep John happy at 7 o'clock is to stay away from him. We have discovered that if we can nurse him through the crucial period from 7 to 8 o'clock he'll stay happy the rest of the night.

From 7 o'clock until the first edition rolls at 9 the city room remains a place where everyone jumps around as though they had the hot-foot. Then everything is comparatively calm until 10, when the mad pace is resumed and continues until 3 the next morning.

We copy boys think we spend a hectic and wearisome life, full of tribulations, indoor exercise and disappointment. But, we wouldn't be anywhere else for anything.

ROBERT T. CASE.

A Labor Protest

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Washington Central Labor Union, representing more than one hundred and thirty thousand American citizens who are members of the American Federation of Labor residing in the District of Columbia, desire to protest to you most emphatically the tirade of your columnist Westbrook Pegler, against members of Trade Unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

We hold no brief for any crook, gangster, racketeer or any other undesirable person who may have by hook or crook worked their way into the ranks of the American Federation of Labor, be they Presidents of International Unions or just plain dues-paying members. We do protest, however, against such broad statements of condemnation against the membership of the American Federation of Labor as were published in the article by Mr. Pegler in The Washington Post of February 19, 1940.

If you or Mr. Pegler will confine yourself to an exposure of any member of organized labor who is guilty of any criminal offense, the Washington Central Labor Union will applaud your efforts, but when Mr. Pegler by innuendo places the members of the Washington Central Labor Union in the same category as those persons mentioned as crooks in the articles appearing in The Washington Post by Mr Pegler, the Washington Central Labor Union believes that both you and Mr. Pegler owe an apology to the thousands of working men and women in the District of Columbia who are members of the American Federation of Labor.

Affiliated with the Washington Central Labor Union are men and women of the highest type to be found in the world, who most sincerely resent the statements that are published by you in The Washington Post.

We do not know Mr. Pegler except by reputation, but we do know Mr. Eugene Meyer, and we cannot accept any statement that he is not responsible for articles that appear in The Washington Post by contributors to his paper.

Mr. Pegler is a paid contributor to your paper and as such is one of your agents. A principal is responsible for the acts of his agents, and we are going to hold you and The Washington Post responsible for any future articles by Mr. Pegler or any one else who libels the good name and reputation of the members of the American Federation of Labor in the District of Columbia.

This letter is sent to you by direction of the meeting of the Washington Central Labor Union held Monday, March 4, 1940, with the request that you give it the same publicity that you give the column of Mr. Pegler.

FRANK J. COLEMAN,
Secretary.

Mexico to Pay 9 Million Barrels Of Oil to Sinclair

Mexico City, March 8 (AP).—A settlement with the Sinclair oil interests, indicating a break in the world-wide boycott established by big petroleum interests when Mexico expropriated their properties two years ago, was reported reliably today.

Disclosure of a plan to pay the American firm 9,000,000 barrels of oil as full indemnity for its seized properties was made by one of President Lazaro Cardenas' closest advisers.

As outlined, the Sinclair settlement would involve little or no cash and the 9,000,000 barrels of oil—currently valued at about $7,000,000—would be furnished over a period of years as yet to be determined.

The predicted agreement was regarded in government circles as the first step toward favorably concluding the controversy that burst when Cardenas seized the holdings of 17 United States, British and Netherlands companies in March, 1938.

Pierlot Warns Belgians on War

Brussels, March 10 (AP).—Premier Pierlot, in a speech at Mons, today warned that "war in overcrowded Belgium would mean a total war, with every shot taking a victim."

"Don't listen to certain moralists or dangerous agitators anxious to drag the country into a crusade of a sacred character which I cannot see," Pierlot pleaded. "Beware of imprudent language and remain calm. One mistake might compromise six months' successful neutrality."

U.S. Bomber Crashes In Cuba; Two Hurt

Camaguey, Cuba, March 10 (U.P.).—A small United States Navy bomber crashed here today while attempting to take off and its two occupants were injured seriously.

The fliers were flown directly to Miami, Fla., in a hospital. They were Lieuts. Eschol M. Mallory, pilot, and Robert Cox.

SENATOR ROBERT A. TAFT
His views on relief are challenged by Ernest K. Lindley in an article below

The Relief Dilemma

By Ernest K. Lindley

The Republican Idea

FOR THE REASONS pointed out recently in this column, one billion dollars will not be enough for WPA next year unless the economic outlook changes miraculously.

With an appropriation almost 50 per cent larger, WPA this year has been unable to provide jobs for more than 1,000,000 workers who are certified as in need of relief. These are apart from the so-called "unemployables" who are on relief.

If WPA is given only $1,000,000,000 for the next fiscal year, it will have to drop about 1,400,000 workers from its rolls by the end of the summer of 1940. There is not in sight an economic pick-up sufficient to provide jobs for this army of 2,400,000 workers. Some will get private work. But in getting it they must compete with millions of unemployed workers who are not on WPA or local relief.

THE WORK-RELIEF program of the Roosevelt Administration, inaugurated in 1935, has never taken care of all the able-bodied unemployed workers who needed relief. But for five years it has taken care of a great majority of them. If WPA is cut to $1,000,000,000, it probably will be able to take care of less than half of them. Averaged over the entire year, $1,000,000,000 would provide 1,350,000 WPA jobs. Including the backlog, there are now at least 3,300,000 workers on WPA jobs or eligible for them.

Here is where the Republicans come in, with their plans for abolishing WPA and putting relief entirely under the States and localities, with a Federal grant in aid.

The Glenn Frank report makes a point of the inequality and unfairness of the present relief system. Some people get WPA jobs while others have to scrape along on the meager dole of direct relief. The same point was made by Landon in 1936. It has been stressed by Vandenberg, Taft and other Republican leaders.

The Republican plan is not to even up by providing enough money to make room for every able-bodied needy unemployed person on WPA. It is to equalize down toward the still lower local relief standards.

Senator Taft has asserted that he could finance a relief program better than the Roosevelt Administration's by giving the States and localities $750,000,000 of Federal money. This would mean less money in the pockets of the needy unemployed. Make no mistake about that. WPA costs the Federal Government about $62 per month per worker. Only $2 of that is for administration. About $54 is for wages to project workers and the rest is for materials. Where the localities are willing to put up enough additional money for materials and supervision they usually get more worthwhile projects. Most localities probably are putting up all they can for WPA and for direct relief to families not cared for by WPA. Some are still going farther into debt to meet these demands.

WITH RARE exceptions, the Republicans plan to return relief to the States and localities, with a Federal grant in aid half the size of the present WPA appropriation, would mean substituting the cash dole for work relief. The cash dole for sitting in idleness might be larger than some of the families on direct relief are now receiving. But unquestionably it would be substantially less than WPA workers are now getting in wages.

For a little extra money spent on materials and supervision, the public gets something in return for its money out of WPA. From the cash dole it would get nothing.

At the same time the Republican argument that the present dual system is unfair will take on more weight if WPA is slashed until it takes care of only half or less of those who are eligible. Such a severe slash would throw back on the localities a heavy additional burden. The demand for Federal grant-in-aid for direct relief would become sharper. If Federal aid were not granted, the present low standards of direct relief would be forced even lower as the money was spread among more people.

The Administration and the Democrats are getting close to the time when they will have to decide whether to keep or abandon the principle of work-relief. They cannot maintain the principle by a token program. They must put up enough money to provide jobs for a great majority of the able-bodied needy unemployed. On the basis of the present economic outlook, $1,000,000,000 would amount to notifying from 1,000,000 to 2,500,000 needy unemployed that they would be no worse off under a Republican Administration than under the New Deal.

Moscow Meeting

Finland And The Powers

DESPITE outward appearances, it has been plain to some observers from the very beginning of the fighting in Finland that this struggle was in a very real sense an extension—if an unexpected and puzzling extension—of the war in the West.

During these past three and a half months, in other words, the Karelian Isthmus, Lake Ladoga and Petsamo have served as the eastern front of the Allied-German conflict, even though neither Germany nor the Allies have been active participants in the fighting at those points.

But only now is this fact being generally recognized. The rumors—now confirmed—of preliminary negotiations between Finland and Russia for a settlement that would end the war, have made it clear even to the most purblind that the two wars which have been raging in Europe are as organically related as Siamese twins. All doubts have now vanished in London and Paris that Finland's position is pivotal, that the action taken by that little country with respect to the Russian offer will have a bearing, and it may be a vital bearing, on the fortunes of the war in the West.

THE NEXT DAY or two may reveal the true meaning of the Moscow meeting which is being attended, on the Finnish side, by some of Finland's outstanding leaders.

It may lead to a settlement. It may not. But the decision which Finland will make may involve not merely her own future destiny but the destiny of the continent as well.

Several possibilities are open.

In the first place, the Kremlin may show wholly unexpected restraint in its demands on Russia's tiny neighbor, be content with concessions which Finland can make without any sacrifice of her independence.

In the second place, Russia may make demands which, if met, would doom Finland to the status of a Slovakia. But since a retreat by Russia from its previous terms is unlikely and since the Finns while fearfully hard-pressed have not yet been defeated, the very fact that negotiations have been taking place in Moscow suggests a third possibility.

This possibility involves not only Russia and Finland but also Russia's ally, Germany, where popular sympathies for Finland have been held in check by the anxiety to remain on good terms with Russia and, above all, by an unwillingness to permit large-scale Allied assistance to reach Finland, Germany does not want to transform the Scandinavian peninsula into a base of operations against her.

GERMANY has a real interest in re-establishing peace in Finland. The longer the war lasts the greater the likelihood of large-scale Allied intervention. Moreover, as long as Russia is using up her resources in fighting the Finns she has nothing to give Germany to enable that country to circumvent the Allied blockade. Furthermore if Finland is completely overrun, Russia would be in a position to threaten Sweden and, by taking over the Aaland Islands, to sit astride the ore route from Sweden to Germany.

But Russia also has an interest in making peace with Finland, although on terms suggesting a victory. Not merely is the Finnish War draining Russia's resources and dislocating her none too efficient means of transportation, but if continued, might handicap her vitally in the event of an Allied attack on her oil regions in the Black Sea and Caspian areas.

In view of these circumstances, a three-way arrangement regarding Finland is not beyond the bounds of possibility.

Suppose, for instance, that Russia to save Stalin's face presses Finland to make greater concessions than Finland was asked to make before the outbreak of the war and suppose that, as compensation to Finland, Germany comes forward as guarantor of Finnish independence. On that basis both Russia and Finland might be able to claim peace with honor and Germany would have won a tremendous diplomatic victory.

Indeed, there are rumors that not only Finland but Sweden as well would be the recipient of a German guarantee against Russia and, in return, would increase her shipments to the Reich.

FOR THE ALLIES any peace which involves a German guarantee of the independence of any Scandinavian country, including Finland, would be a disaster. That is why reports from London and Paris now indicate a real readiness to send large-scale assistance to Finland, provided Sweden is willing to permit it. And if Finland decides not to accept the Russian terms but to fight on there is a possibility that the Allies will send that aid anyway.

In the meantime, we get an interesting clue of how the powers are lining up on this Russo-Finnish peace issue from that useful weathervane—the Italian Fascist press.

At the beginning of the war in Finland the newspapers of Italy were all ardently pro-Finnish and anti-Russian and some Italian aid was sent to Finland. Now the same newspapers are urging peace in Finland.

The axis is proving stronger than sentiment. For it is realized in Italy, though as belatedly as in certain quarters in England, that Finland while fighting for her independence has also been battling for the Allies, and her defeat or capitulation would be an Allied defeat.

British Ration Meat to 36 Cents Worth a Week

London, March 10 (AP).—Meat rationing will become effective in Britain tomorrow under a decree limiting adults to 1 shilling, 10 pence (36 cents) worth of meat weekly and children under 6 years to 11 pence (18 cents) worth.

The restrictions do not apply to poultry, game, kidneys, liver, sausage or cooked meats. It also will be possible to obtain in restaurants without ration tickets, although the portions may be smaller.

Rationing of bacon, butter and sugar has been in effect since January 8.

Northern Ireland, although it produces more meat than it consumes, will be governed by the same restrictions as Britain.

3 Hindus, 3 Moslems Are Killed in Riots

Calcutta, March 10 (AP).—Three Hindus and three Moslems were killed and 12 seriously injured today in a religious riot in the Hooghly district, 25 miles from Calcutta.

The clash started when several Moslems led a cow past Hindus performing a religious ceremony—an act which the Hindus regarded as an insult.

Work on Dam 'At Your Peril,' Phillips Tells U. S.

Oklahoma City, March 8 (U.P.).—Gov. Leon Phillips tonight made public a letter to Secretary of War Woodring demanding the Government halt work on the $54,000,000 Red River dam or proceed "at your peril."

Phillips said the State would protect its rights "with all means at its command."

Turks Protest U. S. Ship Search

Istanbul, March 10 (AP).—The Turkish press today criticized the British contraband control for detaining part of the cargo of the American freighter Exhibitor, which was consigned from the United States to Turkey.

Newspapers declared iron and tin wares, which the British unloaded, were sorely needed by Turkey, who has a mutual assistance pact with Britain.

The Exhibitor arrived in Istanbul without shipping papers, which the British also retained. Turkish authorities were unable to give her clearance for disembarkation.

On Unemployment

By Dorothy Thompson

The Figures Need Examining

"DO YOU ever wonder," asked the Grouse, "why it has become so popular to say over and over that the economic conditions are terrible in the United States? I see by the papers that there is universal agreement on the subject. Mr. John L. Lewis says that there are 9,000,000 unemployed, or maybe 10,000,000 or 11,000,000. The Republican candidates all agree with him. They suspect the employment conditions are even worse. And it's all the fault of the radicals who have destroyed investment opportunities.

"The New Dealers have been telling us for six years that we are in a very bad way. A third of the Nation is hungry and cold, youth can't find work, and there are still 9,000,000 unemployed. All this, of course, might have been changed, but really progressive measures were halted by the die-hards. It's all the fault of the recalcitrant Democrats and the Republicans in Congress."

"Yes. It's too bad. Whoever is to blame, those 9,000,000 unemployed—or is it 10 or 11? Somebody the other day said 12——"

"How do you know that there are 9,000,000 unemployed, or 10 or 12?" asked the Grouse casually.

"Why, everybody says so. It's in all the papers, all the time."

"Young woman, I adjure you to question seriously anything that is constantly reiterated and is in all the papers all the time. From a long and disillusioned life, I have come to the conclusion that the most untrue things that are ever said are the things that are said most generally and are most generally believed. What is an unemployed man, or woman?"

"Idiot! A person out of work."

"When is a person out of work?"

"When he hasn't got a job."

"LET'S SEE. Mr. Smith is an engineer and has a job at $4,000 a year. He has a wife, who was once a crack private secretary and has kept up her shorthand and typing in order to help her husband."

"There is no such wife."

"Admit the possibility. They have two children, an 18-year-old girl and a 17-year-old son. The girl has just entered normal school; the son expects to go to a technical school to study aeronautical engineering. It can all be managed on the family budget. One day father loses his job. He looks for another, but in three months, the family savings are exhausted. How many unemployed are there?"

"One."

"Wrong. I have always said that you should have been subjected earlier to an intelligence test, before you began to hold forth to the world on this and that. There are four unemployed, not one. Father cannot get a job. Everywhere he is told that there are no openings. So mother remembers that she has a friend who might be able to use a stenographer and asks. He doesn't want one, but just to sound out opportunities she registers with an employment agency. Daughter decides that she had better look for something, too, and so does Billy, the son. So they abandon their intentions to be supported for another three or four years by father and are also entered on the books of employment agencies. If father gets his job back, a job at approximately the same salary, the unemployment figures will fall by four not by one."

"Well, that's all right. But you can't make statistics that way."

"No, you can't. And that's why the unemployment figures are not illuminating. How about Jack Fisk? Is he an unemployed?"

"Certainly. Perennially."

"Precisely. Jack gets a job this week and doesn't turn up next, and is out of work every other week or month, because Jack prefers an intoxicated state to a sober one. Much is to be said for Jack's viewpoint, but it makes him an unemployable. All societies, except slave societies have a certain number of Jacks, unemployable for this reason or that. Maybe the number is rising. But they, too, figure in the unemployment statistics."

"WHAT ARE you trying to tell me? That there is no unemployment problem?

"I am trying to ask you to be more precise in your estimates. Was there unemployment in 1929, at the peak of the boom?"

"I suppose so. What is called normal unemployment!"

The Grouse pulled a pencil out of his pocket and began figuring on the tablecloth. "In December 1929, 46,344,000 persons, or about 38 per cent of the population, including children and infants in arms, were employed. In December, 1939, there were 46,304,000 employed, according to the figures of the National Industrial Conference Board. But those figures do not count the people on WPA etc. Theoretically these people, though they work, and get wages and for the most part do work that needs to be done and that would be done by some other government agency, city, town, county or State if it weren't done by the Federal Government, are 'unemployed.' No other country on earth would dream of listing them in unemployment statistics. Well, at last count, there were 2,305,000 such. That means (the Grouse was adding) that 48,609,983 people were employed in December, 1939, or 1,865,983 more than in December 10 years ago."

"All right, all right, if the figures are right, but the population has grown since then."

"Yes. Right you are. It has grown by 10,000,000, among whom, according to the 1929 standard, 38 per cent ought to be working. That makes 3,800,000 extra unemployed. Subtract from that sum 1,865,983 and you have left—wait a minute—1,934,017 fewer people employed, in proportion to the total population, than we had in December, 1929. If December, 1929, is a high mark, then our unemployment is 2,000,000, not 9,000,000. Or, if you want to put it another way, 38 per cent of the total population were employed in the boom year of 1929, and 37 per cent of the population are employed today. There's a favorable fraction on both figures, but I get stuck in decimals."

"You can't be right."

"I can't be right, because you are that typical present-day American who does not want to believe that things are not worse than they are. It is the present disease of democracies: pessimism, and disillusion, combined with utopianism. Now I'll tell you something else. That 37 per cent of the population have a larger part of the national income than they did in 1929, and the national income is larger."

"Now, you are crazy. The national income in 1929 was $81,100,000,000. The national income in 1939 was only $69,633,000,000."

"WHAT MADAME, is a dollar? Can you eat that piece of paper? Can you clothe yourself with it? Can you ride in it?"

"You can buy food and clothing and an automobile with it."

"Precisely. And the purchasing power of the national income in 1939, according to the index of wholesale prices, was the equal of $86,100,000,000, or a gain of 5.5 per cent, and, according to the Cost of Living Index, the purchasing power of the 1939 national income was 4 per cent higher than in 1929. So we are richer than we were, not poorer. And furthermore, if you want to look into foreign trade, you will find that, all unobserved by the calamity howlers, our exports have reached the point where they were in the war boom of 1917. I beg you to think in terms of price levels, of course. And in those terms it was 5.30 in 1917, and in 1940, if we reckon on the basis of January exports, it will be 5.50."

"War profits. Munitions."

"Nonsense. That trade is in everything more than in munitions. People are buying all sorts of things here—not only belligerents, buyers from all over the world, whose normal sellers are out of the running because of the war."

"This Pollyanna stuff is all right. But, think of the share croppers, and the Joads and Okies."

"I do and you should. But there were share croppers and Okies ten years ago. We just weren't share-cropper-Okie conscious. And that's a gain, too. Because now we can do something about them. But it is not necessary to overthrow the whole 'system' to do something about them because the 'system' is working extraordinarily well, considering the amount of distrust, disillusion and general tinkering, some good and some bad, to which it is exposed and subjected."

THE GROUSE was figuring again. "Listen," he said. "If you added nine million unemployed to the ranks of the employed, we would have 44 per cent of the total population working. And that is just plain crazy. Listen, there are 36,056,876 children under 15 in this country. I don't suppose we want to reintroduce child labor. That's 28 per cent of the population. And 5 per cent of the population is over 65 years old; 32 per cent are females between the ages of 15 and 65, and all of them can't go and get jobs! Most of them are, and always have been and should be, wives and mothers who earn their livings by running their homes. Only a quarter of them have ever had outside jobs. So that reduces the normally employable women to 8 per cent of the population. If you write off the kids, the old and the homemakers, you account for 57 per cent of the whole population of the United States. So in order to employ another nine million people, or 44 per cent of the population, you'd have to take 1 per cent off this list and give a job to everybody who is lame, sick, insane, criminal, feebleminded or a hobo by avocation. It's crazy. Add it up yourself: 37 per cent employed, 28 per cent kids, 5 per cent old, 24 per cent women in the home—that's 94 per cent of the whole population accounted for now."

"WHAT MADE you look up all those figures?"

"I told you. Because anything that is repeated over and over, running from the mouth of politician to journalist to constituency, is almost sure to be untrue. The truth is that if between two and three million people get work in this country in addition to those on WPA, or if those now at work get somewhat better wages and we can clean up a few 'devastated areas,' we'll be better off than we've ever been in our lives. So what?"

Night of Sin

I.

I will not hang my clothes carefully on their hangers,
But toss them recklessly upon the nearest chair;
Nor will I brush my shoes, or put them neatly in the closet,
But will kick them off with one splendid defiant gesture, Letting them lie where they fall.
I will not dabble in the bathroom washing out any intimate apparel,
No matter what all the advertisements of soap powder Say of my character or warn of my future loveless existence,
But I will grandly strew them, here and there, in fine disdain
For any retribution in the cold gray dawn.

II.

I will not cold cream my face to clear the smudge of make-up,
Nor will I wash my hands and anoint them with lotion,
Or put vaseline around my nails, or on my eyelashes,
Nor will I give my hair its hundred strokes—or even one,
Nor pin my curls or even don a net.
What is more I will not brush
my teeth or gargle,
Or take the bedtime pill to give me strength and zip.
I will not do a single exercise,
or bend once to the floor,
Massage my brow, or twist my neck, or pat in oil,
Or other chore to cheat my tryst with rest.

III.

I will not breathe deeply before the open window,
Or read a noble bedtime thought,
or wind the clock,
But I will jerk the covers off and drop exhausted,
Into the bed without driving myself to the performance
Of a single rite of Beauty's creed;
Thus making a challenging defiance to my conscience,
And all the old wives' tales, and all the warnings,
Of cosmeticians, beauty columnists; and if upon the morrow
I awake an ogre, I will still say proudly to my mockers,
"I have known freedom—if only for a night."

Tailored Clothes Still Holding Their Own, Today's Fashion Promenade Will Demonstrate

By Marshall Adams,
The Post Fashion Editor.

Despite the extravagance in spring attire, simple tailored classics have an important place in the fashion picture. Many of these functional wearable clothes will be shown, together with more elaborate and spectacular outfits, at the Connecticut Avenue Association's annual fashion promenade today at the Mayflower Hotel. Above is an ensemble of tailored apparel, typical of the more practical styles to be presented at the promenade. The gray herringbone worsted suit, at right, is new looking because of its longer jacket and one-button cut. With it the model, Mary Seldon Kennedy, is wearing a bright turban. The casual felt, left above, is a supplementary headgear. It is of gray felt banded in darker grosgrain and sprouting a pert pigtail at the top. Lower left, are the famous patent wedges that can be worn either for suits or prints. This wardrobe assembly comes from three Connecticut Avenue shops that specialize in sportswear, millinery and shoes. This apparel and everything else needed for the spring wardrobe will be shown at the three fashion promenades at 2, 5 and 8 o'clock today, with a WJSV broadcast at 5:15.

Colorless lacquer can help you cut down a lot of cleaning on large ornate pieces of silver used only for decoration. Thoroughly clean, polish, wash and dry the silver, then cover it with a thin coat of lacquer. When the lacquer begins to wear off remove all of it by rubbing with a cloth dipped in denatured alcohol. Wash in warm water and soap suds and polish again, then repeat the lacquer treatment.

Horace Greeley's Descendant Takes to the Air; Edith King Former Capital Actress, Has Role

New York, March 10.

THE ABOVE lady seems to have gone over the hill, or something, so this space is being filled today by her whipping boy, Sean Ginsberg Hall. A few nights back she went over to Beekman place to discuss glove matters with Merry Hull (nee Whitcomb, of Columbus, Ohio) and took me along for ballast. I got a fine break, for among those present was the former Jean Cooley, lovely former actress, who is now the bride of eftenant Horace Greeley, a pilot now stationed at our Mitchell Field, where he is adjutant to the colonel commanding.

As his name indicates, he is a descendant of THE Greeley, the newspaper tycoon who got off the old gag about go West, young man. The present Greeley is taking it literally, for in a few weeks he and the beauteous Jean start off for a two-year tour of duty in the Philippines. So while Hughes and Hull were gabbing gloves, Jean and I talked Army, which I love, having been a very poor little buck private in that other War to End War. Mrs. Greeley is a very young Army wife, but she is Army family, her pappy being a captain now stationed in the islands.

Before her marriage she was on the stage, and shared a little apartment with Martha Scott, who won fame in "Our Town," and Joy Hathaway, who acted on the radio until she, too, married and checked out.

Jean likes it great, so far. Pilots are alert, gay young men, and a mite superior, for they ge that way looking at the rest of us poor dots crawling on the earth, while they ride high above the world at several hundred miles an hour. We talked of the deadliness of Army life in some posts, where the wives play bridge interminably, or get somewhat involved with other officers. Jean has taken a solemn vow never even to learn bridge. Mrs. Greeley is a rip-snorting beauty, and the other officers in the Islands will prance and preen a bit when she turns up. But she loves her Horace, so they can save 'their moustache wax.

GUY ABOUT TOWN—I saw a very handsome ghost the other night in the cast of "The Burning Deck," the ill-fated play by young Mr. Rosenthal, of Columbus, Ohio, which closed after three performances here. The ghost was the tall, dark and beautiful actress, Edith King, whom I first knew as a stock star in Washington. She was a violent crush of Willis Thornton's, who was city editor of the same paper for which she toiled gently as dramatic critic. She was the only non-blonde I ever knew the fellow to fall for, and now he is deliriously happily married to Eugenia, a tow-head from Kinsman, Ohio, and lives in Cleveland. I wrote to him about seeing Edith, just to see if I could rouse an old-time dream in his skull.

I always learn something interesting from Miss Tobe, the fashion shark She told me the other day that only 1 per cent of women's dresses are sold for $29.50 or over, and that 90 per cent are sold for $10 or less.

Women Told Job Is to Keep Their Men Fit

Good Cooks Not Always The Best Helpmates If Husbands Get Fat

By Ida Jean Kain

THE GOOD cooks are not always the best helpmates . . . but I had to be shocked into realizing it! The jolt was provided by an unexpected meeting with a couple I had not seen for several years. In the interim she had become famous for the excellence of the food served at her table; he had put on 30 excess pounds.

Paul Whiteman

The excess weight had given him high blood pressure, had slowed him up, and had aged him 10 years in appearance. He is no longer the up-and-coming business man! And his wife is mainly responsible. She has not looked out for his interests in the way she should.

Being tall and fairly active, she can eat rich food without danger of a rapid gain in weight. But the head of the house is stockily built and has a complacent disposition. Besides, he sits at a desk all day. It is amazingly easy for him to take on weight, and he has been doing it right along. Incidentally, his wife prides herself on the fact that she never nags him about anything.

Appealed to Friends

Her passive attitude is in sharp contrast to that of a smart young bride. Her husband gained 10 pounds the first year they were married. He liked her good cooking! But she noted the weight increase and promptly got him into the mood to cut down . . . and she didn't do it by nagging! All she did was go around and put his pals up to kidding him about his avoirdupois!

He was greeted with such remarks as, "Say, old boy, aren't you putting on weight?" Or, Well, you certainly look like an advertisement for settling down!" And one of the fattest ones remarked with an air of satisfaction. "You're getting in the same shape as the rest of us!"

After a siege of such chaff, he went home to his wife and demanded, "Hadn't you noticed that I'm getting fat?" And he implored her to put him on a diet!

It is a woman's business to keep her man fit. It is no favor to over-feed him. If he loves to eat, the kindest thing you can do is to help him keep his weight down—he needs help.

Mrs. Whiteman Helps

Probably the classic illustration of a real helpmate is furnished by Margaret Whiteman, keeper of the calories for her Paul. Some years ago, Paul Whiteman took off 100 pounds—with his wife's help. And with his wife's help, he has kept them off.

Mrs. Whiteman had made it her job to learn enough about dietetics so she could plan the menus that give the most food for the fewest calories. She is famous as a hostess—but she can plan a five-course dinner for 700 calories!

If you do not place fattening foods before your husband he will not crave them. And when you cut calories, you can be subtle about it . . . Avoid the fried foods of all kinds! Have the meats broiled or baked, the vegetables broiled or boiled. Have crisp salads, without too much dressing, and crunchy biscuits instead of too many hot breads. Serve the kind of fruit he particularly likes, and occasionally have crackers and cheese for dessert.

Flavor Additions Put Familiar Dishes in New Class

IF YOU have dismissed the onion as being incompatible with seafood in Lenten dishes, just experiment with a discreet addition of minced onion to a rice and crab casserole, and further the cause of flavor with a good proportion of chopped or sliced ripe olives. Saute one small minced onion in two tablespoons butter. Add one-half cup broth—made with one chicken bouillon cube in one-half cup water, if not otherwise available, and one-half cup chili sauce, one-half cup ready-to-use chopped or sliced ripe olives, one cup flaked cooked crab meat and one cup cooked rice. Heat thoroughly in a saucepan over low heat and serve on triangular points of toast. Serves 4 to 6.

The addition of a dash of wine often transforms an inexpensive family dish into an entree perfectly suited for the company table. Crabmeat a la Newburg is in that class. The following is a recipe for making it.

Crab Meat a la Newburg

Melt 3 tablespoons butter in a large saucepan. Add 1 pound or 1 large can of flaked crabmeat. Season with salt and paprika and saute lightly for 4 or 5 minutes. Add ½ cup California sherry wine and let simmer for 5 minutes. Just before serving, add 2 egg yolks beaten up in ½ cup cream, and cook, stirring gently, until thickened. Do not let mixture boil. Serve on toast. Serves 4.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl's Beaux Are Either Younger or Much Older Than She; How Attract Men Her Own Age?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am concerned over the fact that the majority of men who seem to be attracted to me (and whom I date to any extent) are nearly all younger than I; from two to five years younger. As I see it, most girls have boy friends or fiances their own age or older, which I believe to be more or less customary. Or am I wrong?

I'm sure I have average intelligence. According to intelligence tests I have taken at various times, my IQ is better than average for my age and I've held my own in the business world for several years. Could it be that I am not as mature, emotionally, as those my own age? Perhaps I don't "act my age," but then, I can't possibly "act." I'm always just very much myself. I like a good time, too—drinking, dancing, certain sports, etc., and unless I happen to be unusually tired, I exhibit a goodly amount of pep.

Going from one extreme to the other, I have had a couple of beaux who were much older than I. One man was old enough to be my father and the other was 15 years my senior. I wasn't enamoured of either, but they seemed to enjoy my company and they could take me places, so I went. But I can't seem to strike the happy medium, i. e., the man of 30 or thereabouts. (I am nearly 28.)

Please understand that I like these young fellows, appreciate their attentions, want their friendship and am glad they enjoy my company enough to want to take me places and see that I have a good time. But this is the rub: I can't consider any of them as a potential husband. I always have a feeling of "robbing the cradle," which is in no sense a disparagement of them, but rather annoyance at myself that I can't succeed in attracting admirers of more suitable age. I would appreciate your suggestions for solving the problem, as I don't like to think of myself as a CRADLE ROBBER.

Five-Point Program For "Getting Your Man"

DEAR C. R.: In listing the things which you enjoy, I think you forgot to mention that you love to talk about yourself. And this trait probably explains your lack of lasting appeal for men "of 30 or thereabouts," who are most attracted, as a rule, by feminine companions who are intellectually satisfying as well as socially diverting. Some wiseacre, when asked "how to please a man," replied (so the story goes) "If he's 20, praise his looks; if he's 30, praise his mind; if he's 40, praise him." Which is to say—talk about him and forget yourself.

Furthermore, in studying your self-portrait of a girl of 28 who "likes a good time, drinking, dancing, certain sports, etc.," and who "exhibits a goodly amount of pep unless unusually tired"—one gets the impression of a "hey-hey" personality; the gladsome mental lightweight who is the delight of college boys and tired businessmen. So, while you possess an IQ "better than average" for your age, I wonder if you employ it to best advantage in casting for acceptable proposals.

The general tenor of your letter implies vanity and selfishness to a marked degree. It's plain that you're pleased with the fact that you "can't possibly act;" that you're "always just very much yourself." And your repetitious emphasis on men's "enjoyment of your company," their ability and willingness to "take you places," their concern for your "good time," suggests that it probably never has occurred to you that men who come a-courting (whatever their age) have feelings and even a purse to be considered.

This indifference to the unique and often fascinating picture of each individual personality would be apt to land you on the shelf, year after year; so that as men your own age married themselves off to girls of more sympathetic and discerning nature, you would be obliged to accept suitors from the extremes of youth and age.

However, it's ridiculous to think in terms of "robbing the cradle" when accepting the gallantries, or even the matrimonial suit, of a man who is no more than five years younger than oneself. That term applies when one is old enough to be the other person's parent. And even in such cases, the "robbery" appears at times to justify itself, in the mutual happiness thus claimed.

In view of the traditional skepticism (and even derision) with which marriages between younger men and older women are regarded, it might seem tactless to list here the names of certain well-known couples who cared enough to marry in the face of a marked age difference, and who give no evidence of regretting their step. But there are such couples, and their apparent congeniality supports the proverbial exception to the general rule.

The advice I have to give you is indirectly conveyed in the foregoing remarks. To recapitulate briefly: 1. Stop preening before the mirror of your own mind's eye. 2. Shift your attention from yourself to the male of the species. 3. Take him as he comes, but try to know him as a human being; as a study in fascinating human possibilities. 4. Don't reckon his eligibility in terms of chronological age, but in terms of psychological maturity and real congeniality. 5. Give yourself a break by cultivating the intellectual potentialities of your personality, so as to have substantial social fare to offer men your own age. 6. Accommodate the needs of your own nature, and not the rigid rules of tradition, in the matter of marrying. —M. H.

Miss Mary Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Social Stars Glitter at Belasco As Luise Rainer Shines in 'St. Joan'

Many Diplomats Present at Benefit Performance for War Relief; Scene Is Like Hollywood Premiere

Almost hidden by bouquets of flowers, diminutive Luise Rainer, took innumerable bows following her performance last night in "St. Joan" at the Belasco before an audience studded with social lights and diplomats. In her ethereal robes of white, the actress made a striking picture as she received the flowers.

With the exception of klieg lights the show last night—for the benefit of European relief—had all the aspects of a Hollywood premiere. Diplomats who are making headlines were a dime a dozen. The handsome Finnish Minister—in black tie, as were most of the gentlemen—arrived with Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, wearing a silver fox jacket over her black frock, and they sat together during the performance. Earlier in the evening they had been dinner guests of Mrs. Truxtun Beale, when the guests included the Counselor of the French Embassy, Jacques Truelle, Mrs. Bacon, Mrs. Tracy Dows and Olin Dows, all of whom turned up later at the theater.

In a choice seat in the mezannine was the French Ambassador, Count Rene de Saint Quentin. Occupying a box were the Minister of Norway and Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne. Not far away were the Secretary of the Finnish Legation and Mme. Solonka.

One of the largest dinner parties preceding the show was given by Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Rutherford in honor of Igor Gorin who gave a concert at Constitution Hall yesterday with Bidu Sayao, Brazilian artist. Attending the dinner party were Mrs. Bruce Barton, Mr. and Mrs. Kingsman Brewster, Admiral and Mrs. Emory Land, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Warren, Miss Anne Rutherford, Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hurja, Capt. A. C. Andersen, and Arthur O. Hurja, who is Mr. Hurja's brother and is visiting here from Chicago.

Supper Party For Actress

Any number attending the play went onto the Raleigh for the supper party which was given by Mr. and Mrs. Lee D. Butler, for Miss Rainer and Erwin Piscator, famous director who had a hand in directing the Civic Theater show. Mme Piscator, who has been in New York up until now, came down for the opening and attended the party also.

The Elizabethan room, where the buffet supper was held, was abloom with spring flowers last night.

Receiving in front of the large fireplace, banked with palms, were Miss Rainer, who had switched from her dramatic costume of armor, to a simple lame dinner gown. She was still carrying her bouquet of white roses. Also receiving were Mrs. Emil Hurja, in a black chantilly lace gown with a corsage of orchids, and Mr. Butler.

At the tea table were sandwiches, cakes, sherbert and coffee. Punch was served in another part of the room. Noted here and there at the supper party were Mr. and Mrs. George Garrett, Mrs. Demarest Lloyd, Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, Mr. and Mrs. J. Lawrence Houghteling, Mrs. Harold Moorehead, Ralph Totten, Representative Caroline O'Day, wearing black crepe dress trimmed in sequins, with her daughter, Miss Elia O'Day; Senator Theodore Greene and Mr. and Mrs. Corrin Strong.

Maj. Wright Is Applauded

But to return to the truly excellent performance: Receiving a large hand were Rudolf Watson, who played the Archbishop and Maj. Mason Wright as an English priest. Particularly interested in Maj. Wright's performance were Comdr. and Mrs. Jerauld Wright, who had motored over from Annapolis to see Comdr. Wright's brother turn actor. They all attended the dinner party which Gen. and Mrs. William Mason Wright entertained beforehand. Other guests included Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt, Mrs. Eldridge Jordan, Miss Peggy Wagner and Albert Key.

Glimpsed here and there at the performance were debutante Patricia Hurley selling iced drinks and wearing a white fox cape over her turquoise dinner dress; Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins chatting with the Belgian Ambassador and Countess van der Straten Ponthoz; Mrs. Harold Hinton wearing a heavily embroidered blue jacket over her theater frock, Sellita Stapleton, in bright red, selling programs; Mr. and Mrs. Wade H. Ellis chatting in the lobby and Mrs. George Pettengill, whose gown had a turquoise bodice sprinkled with brilliants.

Something of a "surrealist" luncheon was the fete given by Mrs. Joseph Byrns, wife of the Representative from Tennessee, who entertained at a luncheon Saturday. Instead of the usual centerpiece of flowers, Mrs. Byrns had arranged what she termed the "String Fever Motif." Rising from the center of the table was a green plaster hand with the forefinger extended, holding a green spring hat. Shooting out from the top of the hat were pink gladioli and daisies. Completing this amusing set with the Salvador Dali air were green rubber gloves, a bright green garter snake (fake) and tiny green wheelbarrows, sprinkled up and down the table.

Guest of honor at the party was Mrs. James G. Stahlmann, of Nashville, wife of the publisher of the Nashville Banner.

Other guests included Miss Gerry Mayor, of New York City; Mrs. Arthur Marshall Spencer, of Gastonia, N. C.; Mrs. Jesse Cottdell, who will entertain Mrs. Stahlmann at luncheon today; Mrs. Robert Henry, Mrs. Edward Melniker and Mrs. Fred W. Gillette.

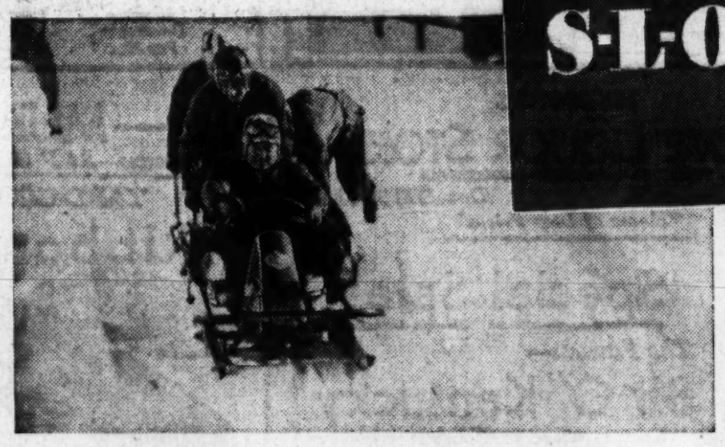
"SPEED for bob-sledding thrills! S-L-O-W BURNING for smoking thrills!" says champion "Bucky" Wells



THEY'RE OFF—on the mile-long Mt. Van Hoevenberg run at Lake Placid, N. Y. with "Bucky" Wells driving. Fifteen breath-taking turns to go. Fifteen chances to taste the supreme thrills of speed. But in smoking it's different, very different. "It's slow burning that makes a cigarette tick with me," "Bucky" Wells says. And he means what he says, because he's smoked slow-burning Camels for ten years.

"ONE-TWO-BOB! ONE-TWO-BOB!" And, as the crew bobs, "Bucky" picks up speed...60—70—80 miles an hour, driving high on the glassy wall of ice as he swings the quarter-ton steel sled around the curve. But in the field of cigarettes, this daring speedster gives the laurels to the quality of slow-burning that he finds in Camels. You can tell by their mild, mellow taste that Camels burn cooler, slower—and scientists have confirmed this: Camels burned slowest of all in recent tests. (See panel, right.)

IF you want to know how it feels to go 80 miles an hour on a racing bob-sled, "Bucky" Wells of Keene Valley, N. Y. can tell you. But when it comes to cigarettes, "Bucky" Wells is on the slow side... the slow-burning side. If you know your cigarettes, that means Camels!

"I know that Camels burn slower," "Bucky" says. "There's cool comfort in a slow-burning Camel. Mildness—more flavor. Every puff is a fresh treat to the taste, and—get this—there are many more puffs to enjoy in a Camel. Slow burning means extra smoking. 'I'd walk a mile for a ....'"

Even if a gust of wind did carry away "Bucky's" last word, not many people would fail to realize it was C-A-M-E-L. Camels are made from costlier tobaccos—drawn from the greatest treasure of mellowed tobaccos ever brought together in one place in the whole world.

In recent laboratory tests, CAMELS burned 25% slower than the average of the 15 other of the largest-selling brands tested—slower than any of them. That means, on the average, a smoking plus equal to swerved back into the right lane. He was charged with failing to give a hand signal.

Mrs. Mabel Parnall, 42, of Arlington, suffered a skull fracture and multiple head cuts early yesterday when an automobile in which she was a passenger was struck by another, whose operator fled. The automobile in which Mrs. Parnall was riding, driven by her husband, Arthur, rolled over in a ditch.

The injured woman was taken to Georgetown University Hospital by Edward Deebo, of Glen Echo, Md. Her condition was said to be serious.

Two CCC Men Injured

Two colored men, both enrolled in a CCC camp at Cardenock, Md., were injured when their automobile collided with another on Goldsborough road in Montgomery County, Md. Amos Custis, 24, suffered a fractured rib, and Ulysses Emery, 26, a fractured leg. They were taken to Georgetown Hospital by William B. Rumple, 3900 Cathedral avenue northwest.

When an automobile in which he was riding swerved from the road and crashed into a light pole in the 3400 block of Alabama avenue southeast, George Stevens, 40, of 705 G street southeast, suffered severe face injuries. David Miller, 44, of 1374 G street southeast, told police he swerved to avoid another automobile.

Virginia Fields, colored, 33, of 1026 Dix street northwest, was cut about the face when an automobile in which she was a passenger stopped abruptly at North Capitol and H streets to avoid striking another. She was hurled partly through the windshield.

Robert L. Robertson, 38, of Bethesda, suffered head injuries when a car in which he was riding collided with another on Conduit road near Glen Echo, Montgomery County police said the automobile plowed into the rear of one driven by Wilson Seatwale, of Washington.

More than 70 fires, fanned by blustery winds, swept over acres of brush, destroyed a house and a garage, drove a woman and her daughter from their home, and caused injury of one fireman. The wind, however, failed to daunt 40,000 holiday makers who trekked to the Zoo.

Yesterday's sunshine and wind will be followed today by little change in temperature but increasing cloudiness, the weatherman predicted. A low of 27 degrees was expected early today after yesterday's low of 34 at 8 a. m. and high of 45 at 3 p. m.

William Ward, 27, rookie member of the Silver Spring, Md., Volunteer Fire Department, was painfully burned when he fell before flames which swept across 20 acres of brush at Four Corners, Md. Three other brush fires in Montgomery county kept firemen busy.

The home of Roy Walker, on Conduit road near Great Falls, Md., was destroyed despite efforts of the Rockville and Cabin John Fire Departments while Walker and his family were at church. Loss was estimated at $4,000 to $5,000.

In Washington, Mrs. Evelyn Green and her daughter, Carrie, 14, were driven from their home at 57 Myrtle street northeast by fire. Green, an employe of the Government Printing Office, and five children were absent at church.

Parties this week include the G. P. O. Post, American Legion, movie nights Wednesday and Thursday in Harding Hall, at the Government Printing Office; and the Kenna-Main Post, American Legion, party at St. Elizabeths Hospital Friday night, at 8 o'clock in the Red Cross Hut.

The approximately $4,500 received to date represents receipts from scores of card parties and dances, sponsored by groups and organizations here since the drive began.

The Federal Diary:

This is the exhibit pig at the Bureau of Animal Industry, Agriculture Administration Building. Virginia Jackson inspects some of its foodstuffs

Furlough Notices Will Be Sent to 400, Half Effective March 21, Balance at End Of Month; 200 More to Go Before July

A "rainy day" is more likely for the 600 PWA employes who face a furlough by July 1 than last-minute rescue through passage of the Ramspeck bill which would make them eligible for Civil Service status.

Union proposals have urged that furlough notices be stayed until employes have used up their accrued leave in the hope that they would be able to move from disappearing PWA jobs into other Government agencies.

The furlough notices, however, went out to 200 employes last week, with their jobs to end March 21. An additional 200 notices will go into pay envelopes the end of March, and 200 more before July. The move results from the PWA program of winding up its operations.

Dimming the hope offered by the Rampseck bill is the time which would be needed after passage to give the individual PWA employe facing loss of work the protection of Civil Service status.

The employe would have to wait for the President to decide that PWA should be covered into the Civil Service, would wait next for the agency to certify that he would be blanketed in. Afterward there would be the Civil Service noncompetitive examination, with physical examination, to test whether the employe should retain the job.

Further hampering the rescue would be pressure from other agencies seeking to have their employes certified. Also the Civil Service Commission, already six months to a year behind in operation of major branches, has received but half the funds it needed to bring work up to date.

PWA officials who have to deal out the furlough notices speak of the cutting-down process as a "tragic" situation, and mean it. They are afraid, however, that employes who wait for the Ramspeck bill, and use up their accrued leave, will be left with neither job nor the extra check due for leave. Their word is to take the cash.

A disturbing lesson in what the machine age has done to the inside of turkeys is shown in an exhibit of the Bureau of Animal Industry, in the Agriculture Administration Building patio.

The modern turkey, the exhibit would indicate, is alive with "little men," on the inside, to grind food and pump essential juices. Actually the 8-foot cross-section explains the inner workings of the fowl in terms of a factory. Little lights keep flashing, to point out what goes on. The little men are tireless. And worst of all, the heart, a two-cylinder job, squeaks.

Across the way is a life-size pig, with black velvet coat and bib, standing up with a tray of fodder. His eyes are fixed on platters of wheat, rye, barley, corn. For a guide, he has a bureau chart telling just what produces a pound of pork.

This scientific exposition is worth a look. You can vote on whether you like fat, lean or medium beef. There are pictures to show which is which.

Another look might go to the Commerce Department lobby show of plastics—automobile parts, jewelry, false teeth, office equipment made from things like milk, soy beans or carbolic acid.

WHATAWEEK! Everything happens at once, sometimes. And this week is one of those times. New spots, new shows, new faces, special parties. There's a dizzy week ahead.

The Casino Royal (formerly Bamboo Gardens) opens tomorrow eve with Wally Wanger's Broadway Revue and Eddy Wald's dance music. Three floor shows will be staged at 7:30, 10:30 and 1, and we're hoping Huey Liang will sing "Road to Mandalay." Dancers Labrun and Campbell and Ed Rickard, shadowgraph artist, will be among the star acts.

Tom O'Donnell tells us that his new Sea Grill will be opened to the public not later than Wednesday evening. The Sea Grill is five places in one, is sure to become well known all over the country. Be sure to make a grand tour of all its rooms before you leave.

Pete Macias and his band will celebrate their first anniversary in the Lounge Riviera on Wednesday. And will it be a party! Pete has been one of the town's best-loved maestros for years, naturally gets younger every year.

Canary Eileen George will flash her personality in the Anchor Room beginning today. She has a contralto deep as the sea, a song delivery light as fluff.

Alex Rotov's dances in a high comedy mood will give special distinction to the Shoreham's new floor show beginning today. That splendid soprano, Marjorie King, returns. Hawaiian dances by Marianne Cude and ballroom dancing by Bennett and Barclay.

Luba Malina has started conga dancing at the Troika, leads the line as Lee Kerry calls the steps. This is the conga specialty that the dazzling Malina did at Ben Marden's Havana Casino. We hear the Troika's jampacked every night.

A double quota of dancing stars will head the new show at the Lotus today. They are acro-tappers Telar and Martin and ballroom dancers Audrey and Price. The Tip Tap Girls will do a new parade number.

GUEST ARTIST A REAL ARTIST. When Eddy Mayhoff introduced "a noted artist from New York" at the Cafe Caprice the other eve, most of the customers thought it was another of Eddy's ribs. But their eyes popped when the "artist" dashed off a flock of sketches for them, turned out to be Don Freeman, well-known illustrator and a special pal of Eddy's.

ROVING REPORTER DEPARTMENT. Ray Kulz, of the Mayfair's new Rhythm Boys will be visiting around the Capitol Theater considerably this week. He was a member of Benny Davis' revue a few seasons ago . . . Peter Borras, of the Madrillon, is drawing elaborate blueprints for Madrillon's forthcoming twentieth anniversary party . . . Maxine Tappan, of the Mayflower Lounge, has gone superpatriotic in a red, white and blue costume . . . George Macdonald, ace saxophonist in Eddy Brandt's Metronome Room orchestra, has just made the acquainted of his 2-month-old son, Ronald. Mrs. Macdonald and young Ronald have arrived from Boston for a spring visit in Washington . . . Cordial "Mac" McCarthy, of the Robin Hood, knows more people! But naturally. For he was with the Congressional Club for years and before that with the Brentwood Golf Club on Long Island . . . Shar-Zad's Kay Hoyt is still receiving congrats on the clever numbers she contributed to that razzle-dazzle Leap Year Party given at Sulgrave for the Thrift Shop.

Two girls of the Wally Wanger Revue opening tomorrow at the Casino Royal BRIGHT LISTENING. Hi Hat customers are plumb delighted with the new Ray Harts Diplomats. The group really "gives" in any number you can mention. Requests for rumbas, popular songs and waltzes are all polished off smartly and with a zing . . . Nightingale's Bill Downer is making a specialty of hot-cha comedy numbers for the midnight hour. He makes a point of bringing out a new "snap tune" every other week . . . Ray King and his orchestra are now sounding off in a big way at the Log Tavern.

VIRTUOSO OF VICTUALS. There's shining diversion in the Neptune Room. But you never see the star entertainment unit. We mean the chef and his staff. Every opus they turn out is a melody for the inner man, with perfectly keyed sauces and salads in close harmony. They believe in frequent changes of tune, too, and you'll always find novel numbers on the Neptune menu.

"RIGHTEOUS DANCE." Comes a bulletin that the Washington Swing Club will toss their first dance at Wardman Park on April 17 with two big orchestras and continuous music from 9 to 1.

1,500 Dance Here to Aid Refugees

Homes in Palestine Assured for 63 Through Hadassah Donor Party

A new home in Palestine for 63 young Jewish refugees from Europe and medical service to many others there was assured last night by contributions of the throng at the Hadassah Donor Dinner Dance at the Mayflower Hotel.

The 1,500 persons, who paid from $15 to a maximum of many times that amount for each pair of tickets, helped to swell the Hadassah fund. Last night's program was the culmination of the annual campaign.

Rabbi James G. Heller, of Cincinnati, the principal speaker, predicted that the dawn of a new day "will come out of Zion" and that the national home in Palestine will be the nucleus for a new era.

Calm Amid Chaos

"Looking back over 20 centuries of our life, we can't let today and its chaos disturb us too greatly," he said.

Mrs. Paul Muni, wife of the actor, was introduced as a leader in Youth Aliyah work. She said she would greet the crowd as she and her husband were greeted in Palestine with the word "Sholom"—peace.

Mrs. Moe Offenberg, president of the Washington Chapter Hadassah, who presided at the dinner, said that the amount raised last night was still undetermined because of the variations in payments for tickets.

It was announced at the dinner that Mrs. Paul Himmelfarb, who died recently, had asked her husband to send $360 to give "new life" and opportunity to a Jewish child refugee through this fund.

Mrs. Offenberg announced that Hadassah has a membership of 1,700 women in Washington, in the total of 90,000 American women who belong. She said Hadassah is devoted to the work of a medical system in Palestine, to the welfare of children there and to assistance in rescuing youth from Central Europe for new homes in Palestine.

Goal Is 23 Millions

Rabbi Isadore Breslau, president of the Washington Zionist District and cochairman of the United Jewish Appeal, announced that the coming appeal for assistance to world Jewry in need has a goal of $23,000,000. Of last year's goal of $20,000,000, the campaign in Washington brought $200,000—or 1 per cent of the total, he said, urging an increase here this year to keep pace with the larger goal.

Morris Simon, cochairman of the appeal, also was cited among the introductions for his "exemplary leadership."

Dr. Walter C. Lowdermilk of the Soil Conservation Service, Department of Agriculture, and Mrs. Lowdermilk, who recently visited Palestine, were among the honor guests. She made a brief talk on the promising appearance of the young refugees and on their adjustment to their new homes.

Meyer Davis, whose orchestra played for the dancing, and Mrs. Davis also were among the honor guests.

Worshipers Told God Is No Dictator

Potomac Heights Pastor Says None Has Preference In His Kingdom

The Kingdom of God is no dictatorship, the Rev. Albert E. Gingrich yesterday morning told his Potomac Heights Community Church worshipers.

In His Constitution, said the clergyman, "God is supreme, all men are brothers, and none has preference. It does not have one code of laws for insiders and another for outsiders."

Describing the Kingdom of God as the "only real Constitution," the Rev. Mr. Gingrich made reference to that part of the United States Constitution which guarantees "equal justice before law," then cited cases of the sentence of a man to one year and one day in prison for a $1,000,000 swindle, while another person received a similar sentence for forging a check for $2.64.

"To Save Us From Sin"

Across the city, at Metropolitan Presbyterian Church, Fourth and B streets southeast, Dr. J. Lowrey Fendrich said last night that "the mental is the real business of living, in shaping and guiding one's life in accordance with the Divine plan." Epworth League members of Chevy Chase Methodist Church were guests of the congregation's young people.

In spite of present day confusion, wars and other tribulations, there is much evidence that God still cares for humanity, the Rev. Virgil M. Cosby advised his congregation at River Road United Presbyterian Church.

"The main purpose of Christ's suffering was to save us from sin," the Very Rev. Lawrence J. Shehan said last night over the Catholic Radio Hour. ". . . and to give us a practical lesson of the way we too must accept suffering as the portion of our life." Assistant pastor of St. Patrick's Catholic Church and director of Catholic Charities, he spoke from the Church of the Immaculate Conception.

As Winter Goes . . .

Washington is at that in-between-season spot where winter hasn't quite died and spring isn't here. Spring flowers on Connecticut avenue give a preview of what soon will be growing in gardens and fascinate (top) Mrs. Northcutt Ely, of Leesburg, and Mrs. Stanley Smith, of Bethesda (right). But winter sports draw the attention (center) of Red Bainbridge and Ruth Parkinson, shown rehearsing for the Ice Carnival at Riverside Stadium. Spring can't be so far away, though, when fishermen groom their tackle as does Leonard Tippett, who won't be caught unprepared.

Jewel Thief Seized in D.C. War on Crime

Caught Entering Store, Police Say; 3 Suspects Taken In Holdup Chase

Intensification of the citywide drive against crime has led to the capture of a jewelry store looter and three suspected thugs in the past two days, police revealed last night.

The 30-year-old gem robber, believed to have stolen more than $1,000 in merchandise from three downtown jewelry stores in the past several weeks, was seized early Saturday morning as he apparently was attempting to smash a window of the Ross Co., Inc., at 1331 F street northwest, according to his captor, Private George Weaver, of First Precinct station.

The thief spied Weaver and fled but was caught by Weaver and Private E. F. Nolan, patrolling a beat nearby.

Three men assaulted William Gorham, colored, of 1012 Rivers court northwest, as he was about to enter his home early yesterday. They took $8 and stripped him of his overcoat, sweater and hat.

Informed of the robbery by radio, a police cruiser a half block away rushed to the address, and after a brief chase the suspects were captured by Privates A. L. Embrey and A. B. Hitt, and Sergt. J. R. Leach, who was on special detail.

Three Are Seized

Charged with robbery, as being the assailants of Gorham, were three colored men, Daniel Morton, 25, of 460 G place northwest; John Wesley Carter, 23, of 124 D street northwest, and Rufus Carter, 25, of 207 K street northwest.

George B. Howard, chauffeur for the Polish Embassy, told police his home at 3501 Alton place northwest, had been rifled and $300 worth of silver plate stolen. The thief also took a revolver, Gladstone bag, diamond ring and personal papers of Mrs. Howard. The silver set consisted of 85 pieces.

Raymond H. Katz, of 7422 Georgia avenue northwest, reported $50 in cash and two watches, worth $15 and $3, were stolen from an open safe in his electrical supplies store at 7323 Georgia avenue northwest.

Thieves stole several dollars fro ma cigarette and candy vending machine at the International Harvester Co. branch at 901 Bladensburg road northeast, police reported.

W. Parks Crater, assistane superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, told police an attempt had been made to enter his home at 3428 Patterson street northwest. A side door had been forced open, but an inner door thwarted the burglars.

According to police, the burglar admitted raiding A. Kahn, Inc., 935 F street northwest, $400 in gems; Ernest Burk, Inc., 614 Thirteenth street northwest, $300 in merchandise; Selinger's, 818 F street northwest, $200 in merchandise. He entered the stores by breaking a window with a padded length of pipe. He refused to reveal where he had hidden the loot.

Max Friedburg, of 1332 Seventh street northwest, reported a colored bandit robbed him of $65 after threatening him with a gun in his store at 633 D street southeast. The man entered the store, ordered a soft drink, and then pulled out the gun.

Distinction and Big Money Wave to Unknown Boy

A Jody Baxter Sought in Nation-wide Hunt; Notable Gathering Salutes a Former Critic; This, That and the Other About the Theater

COME ON, YOU JODY BAXTERS, crawl out of the brush and drag your second-hand shotguns up to the Mayflower Hotel today and take a whirl at the title role in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's projected picturization of Marjorie Kinnan Rawling's story of "The Yearling."

BELL

William Deering, M-G-M talent scout, in a nation-wide hunt for the proper kid for the part, will be on hand all day today—and possibly tomorrow—looking over aspirants for the role of the Florida back-country boy who learned about life from a fawn. He must be—the lad, not Mr. Deering—between the ages of 8 and 10, which I should say might reasonably be stretched to 12; must be between 4½ and 5 feet tall, slender, and have large and sensitive eyes. This sensitive eye business seems less important to me in the boy than in the fawn. But that is Mr. Deering's business.

Spencer Tracy already is written down as the Penny Baxter of the picture—the wiry little Dad, who so completely comprehended the perplexities of his son. About the rest of the cast I wouldn't know. At the moment M-G-M probably wouldn't, either. But there is a magnificent opportunity for some youngster to gain undying fame in the role of Jody. As I have said here before, if Wesley "Freckles" Barry hadn't been born 30 years too soon, he would have been the ideal selection. Under the circumstances, maybe you, or you, or you are the one they are looking for.

If you have the daring to face Mr. Deering, you'll find out.

Haste made waste one day last week. In a race of death against an advanced deadline, we set down an egregious misstatement concerning Jeanne D'Arc and Shaw's "Saint Joan." We realized it the instant we saw it in type—too late to do anything about it. We would have found out, anyway. Letters have been piling in ever since, castigating this column with every bruising adjective General Jim Farley permits to pass through the mails. Even a few that he doesn't. Out of it all we have derived the consolation that apparently we have 25 or 30 readers, over and above the four we were sure of. So thanks for the beer and the buggy ride, even if the road was full of jolts!

Enduring memories of the Variety Club's testimonial dinner to our long contemporary and erstwhile sparring partner, Judge Andrew Raymond Kelley, in the Willard Hotel, last Friday night:

The kindly sincerity of Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, the grandest and most patiently paternal personality with whom some of us ever have been called upon to foster joint enterprises; the simple honesty of the Rev. John Cartwright; the sly humor of Representative Sol Bloom, dean of all the showmen in Washington; the profound humanitarianism of Joe Tumulty; the hilarious wit of Pete Mack, the most pungent comedian of the evening; the post-prandial tongue-wagging with George O'Connor—who didn't sing "Saloon"—Tom Brahany, Mark Foote, president of the Gridiron Club; Dick Wilson, president of the National Press Club, and the all-embracing hospitality of Carter Barron. The brief spanning of a quarter-century with Johnny Payette; Jimmy Lake's pride in introducing "Little Jimmie," whom we hadn't seen since he was a tow-headed little scallawag of 3 or 4, whom we used to plant in the front row of the Metropolitan to see the show when his face and hands were clean enough—which was seldom. "Little Jimmie" is 18 now, a college student and a brunette—of all things. Come on, Tempus, have a heart and slow down a bit! The smart showmanship of Sid Marion, Cliff Hall, Benny Davis, Ted Lewis—playing truant from a flu bed in the hospital—the Mills Brothers, Mary Dooley, Marie Austin and all the others who went to town for Andy. The local band boys—they were all there—Leon Brusiloff, Morgan Baer, Dave McWilliams, Pete Macias, Bill Strickland, Bill McCune, Barnee and Sidney. Not forgetting our brilliant fellow-Hoosier, Evelyn Tyner, who can make any man's piano jump through and play dead. Alvin L. Newmyer running true to form as the Capital's top toastmaster. If Andy ever forgets that night, I know a good psychiatrist!

Speaking of Sid Marion and Cliff Hall, as we were somewhere back there, they have clicked in "The Streets of Paris" and it is now "their show." The turnstiles at the National last week ran up something like $25,000—not "hay," even in a feed store. A Shubert representative flew into town from New York Saturday night to check the boys at the end of their first week of subbing for Abbott and Costello. He looked at one scene and flew right back again. Sid and Cliff were "in." Abbott and Costello are permanently out. And nobody will ever know the difference. Except that Marion and Hall might be better.

"Black Beauty" has a rival. There is a short screen subject coming up—it was previewed as a curtain-raiser to "Northwest Passage" last Tuesday—presenting the biography of Seabiscuit, the Charles S. Howard bangtail that has won more money on the tracks than any horse that ever wore plates or looked through a bridle. Seabiscuit, it seems, was the "forgotten man" of his breed back there in the early days. Under Mr. Howard's kindly tutelage, he got himself remembered. I still could stop him with a $2 bill!

And-That-Reminds-Me Note

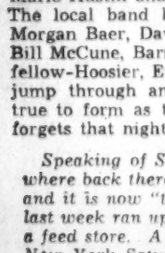
In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, March 10.

In this age, when Hollywood money is the ambition of everyone in the show business it's stimulating to hear about the season's most sensational holdout. 20th-Century-Fox is offering for "Tobacco Road," $200,000 plus 10 per cent of the first million. But Jack Kirkland, author and coproducer, says the time won't be ripe for a Hollywood sale for another year. And this for a show that's been running for seven years on Broadway. And when it is sold, RKO has first choice with Charles Laughton, Orson Welles in the leading parts.



HOPPER

When Darryl Zanuck went to Sun Valley, among other scripts he carried under his arm, was one about Lotta Crabtree as a young girl. What a natural for Shirley Temple and how I'd like to see Jackie Cooper play opposite her. They make a mighty tasty-looking couple.

Jackie told me about going to an Italian wedding the other day, the sister of the singe of his band. There were 600 present. And 11 children in the family. He said, "Imagine sitting down to dinner every night with 13 at the table—and not a stranger in the outfit" . . .

The report that Lee Bowman and Joan Crawford were planning an elopement is a little premature, because Lee is soon to marry Helen Del Valle, Hollywood society girl.

Robert Stack, now playing "Mortal Storm," won the State skeet shooting championship. Now Clark and Carole want to take him on.

When Zorina was doing those breath-taking leaps in "I Was an Adventuress" I noticed her mother, Mrs. Belle Hartwig, sitting there with her head bowed, and asked why. She said, "I only come on he set when my daughter's doing those leaps. And here's the reason: I was praying." "You mean, when your head was bowed, you prayed?" "Yes. All her life Vera has had a terrific fear that some day she would fall. And it makes her feel better if I'm nearby praying for her. I'm not ashamed to admit it." . . .

Out of 65,000 crypts at Forest Lawn Cemetery the most beautifully decorated and tended is that of Florenz Ziegfeld. Twice a week there are fresh white and yellow flowers. And when she's in town they're brought by Billie Burke herself, who goes just before closing time and says a silent prayer when no curious eyes are around to see her.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

VINCENT SHEEAN, author of Ethel Barrymore's new play which now is in rehearsal, hasn't been permitted to attend the rehearsals—by order of Guthrie McClintic, who is producing the show . . . McClintic has insisted that no person, except the members of the cast, be allowed inside the theater . . . The author and the others have been kept out because Guthrie McClintic is reading Miss Barrymore's role during these rehearsals. Miss Barrymore has been too ill to come to the theater, and so McClintic is substituting for her—and he wants no more witnesses than are necessary . . . "But no matter how well I read the lines," said McClintoc, "it slows up Kent Smith, the leading man. He requires the real thing."

WHEN THE NEWSPAPERS announced that two prominent Republicans, whose names begin with "H," are involved in the State printing scandal, a group of reporters beseiged Bernard Botein, counsel to the Moreland Commission making the investigation . . . "Who are these two men whose names begin with 'H'?" the reporters asked . . . "Oh, how I wish we all were in London now," replied Botein . . . "What's London got to do with it?" the newspaper men persisted . . . "Because if we were in London," explained Botein, "you would drop your H's."

"REUNION IN N. Y." will give an invitation matinee next Friday for the actors now working in Broadway shows . . . County Judge Martin will return to the bench on April 1 . . . Joey Jacobson and Mike Fritzel, owners of Chicago's Chez Paree, will strengthen their partnership ties by opening a Beachcombers Bar in that city . . . Now that Lepke has been convicted, Dewey's office expects a number of notorious lammisters to surrender because no more hideout money is being supplied to them.

CAPT. JOHN TOWNLEY, captain of the Elizabeth, rejected $2,000 to make a 4-minute broadcast, because he didn't think it would be ethical . . . The first person with whom he dined in New York was Nat Abramson, of WOR, who was a cruise director and became Townley's friend ten years ago . . . Because Capt. Townley didn't know, when the Elizabeth first left its dock, that his destination was America, be brought no clothes with him—and so Abramson supplied them . . . Townley received hundreds of telegrams and cables, including one from the Queen, congratulating him upon his feat—which will bring him a Knightbood. He reached into the batch carelessly, extracted one cablegram and opened the envelope. It was from his wife.

THE TRAINED SEAL hired for the new musical, "Higher and Higher," worked perfectly and on cue through each of the rehearsals . . . But at the dress rehearsal in New Haven, with the sets in place and the costumed cast waiting, the seal didn't respond to cue and failed to appear . . . "It's simple," the trainer explained later. "In rehearsals the seal never worked on any sets, but only on a bare stage. The set threw him off cue. He'll be accustomed to it tomorrow." And he was.

MRS. ALICE ROOSEVELT LONGWORTH appeared at the Helena Rubinstein art exhibit for the benefit of the Polish Refugee Fund . . . Eleanor Roosevelt had appeared there the day before and was photographed standing against Picasso's "Inspiration" . . . Mrs. Longworth agreed to pose, and asked the photographer: "Against which painting did Mrs. Roosevelt pose?" . . . The cameraman pointed to the Picasso . . . "Very well, then," said Mrs. Longworth, walking across the room, to stand in front of a Renoir watercolor, "then I'll take this one."

A COMMITTEE of prominent writers is being formed, to halt the deportation proceedings against H. T. Tsiang, the Chinese writer . . . Ferenc Molnar has refused to attend any of the rehearsals of his "Liliom." "I want to wait until the cast knows the lines better," he explained, "because I do not wish to embarrass them" . . . John Ford, the director, presented his own Best-Acting Award for 1940 to Carl Johnson, the husky physical director at the Hollywood Athletic Club, for losing a wrestling match to the 130-lb. Roscoe Karns and convincing the winner that he really had won.

Wide Diversity Marks New Bill At Trans-Lux

The world's largest ocean liner, the majestic Queen Elizabeth, her sides splashed drab, is a leading feature in the news section at the Trans-Lux Theater for the current week, as she steams into New York Harbor. Not with the usual fanfare of a maiden voyage does she arrive, but unannounced and passengerless, after a thrilling dash through mine and submarine infested waters for a safe and secure haven in a neutral port.

From the Finnish front come snowbound scenes of Russian planes down and their crews wiped out. And on the Western Front the Allies are busy taking in tons of ammunition and huge quantities of food supplies in anticipation of a spring offensive.

Disaster scenes include the million-dollar hangar fire at La-Guardia Airport; the freak blizzard that swept the East, a spectacular lumber fire at Baltimore, the coal mine cave-in at Shenandoah, Pa., and the tragic train wreck in Mexico.

The fastest planes in the air—United States Army pursuit planes are tested in California, and in formation, incidentally, are a basis for a series of remarkable and beautiful camera shots over San Francisco. While in France, Madeleine Carroll is shown at her chateau caring for hundreds of war orphans.

In the lighter vein, we find Lew Lehr presenting a baby crawling marathon, a Swedish-Finnish bandy match, a colorful carnival in Italy, the A. A. U. water ballet, a college track meet and the Eastern ski-jump meet.

The Vatican of Pius XII, the first complete motion picture ever filmed inside Vatican City is the latest March of Time contribution.

There is a beautiful travelog of New Hampshire, in color, which includes a visit to Dartmouth at the time of the winter carnival. Walt Disney offers Donald Duck, in "Beach Picnic," to round out a splendid show.

Atlas

"Hollywood Revels," featuring Frankie Richardson, star of "Fox Movietone Follies" and "Sunnyside Up," is the "name" of the current stage show at the Atlas Theater.

Frankie Masers the ceremonies and introduces first the "Marcelleaus Dances," a sensational adagio act.

The comedy department is headed by Jed Dooley & Co., who introduce a novel sense of humor to the delight of the Northeast patrons.

Mr. Richardson then sings "A Hundred to One," "Oh Johnny" and several other hits of the day and is given an enthusiastic reception.

The stage portion of the show is closed by "Moran & Weiser," internationally famous jugglers.

The double feature screen bill is comprised of Douglas Fairbanks, jr., in "Rulers of the Sea," and Jane Withers in "High School."

Luise Rainer and Civic Cast Triumph in Shaw's 'Saint Joan'

By Nelson B. Bell

Weeks of painstaking preparation were richly consummated in the Belasco Theater last night, when Luise Rainer made her American stage debut in the title role of George Bernard Shaw's superb play of "Saint Joan."

Dedicating her services to the benefit of the American Red Cross' European War Relief Fund, with the Washington Civic Theater sharing honors in an illustrious presentation of a sterling play, Miss Rainer made it conclusively evident that even those film assignments that won her two successive Academy Awards fell short of realizing more than a fraction of the brilliant dramatic talent with which she is endowed. Her portrayal of the role of the sainted Maid of Orleans is by turns ethereal, radiant and emotionally vivid and powerful. More perfectly suited to the rigid requirements of the role by the gentle touch of time, temperament and those intangible qualities of the born actress than many others who have essayed it on the native stage in recent years, Miss Rainer last night established herself high in the estimation of one of the National Capital's most brilliant first-night audiences.

Under the joint directorship of Erwin Piscator and Day Tuttle, the present version of "Saint Joan" skirts lightly around the colorful pageantry that so often obscures the vital drama of a major Shavian work as rich in shrewd satire as it is in heroism, pathos and a deft transfiguration of tragedy into triumph. The manner of the play's production recalls the heyday of the late Ben Greet, when symbolism supplanted elaborate "staging." Screens and easels are employed at the Belasco this week to take the place and perform the function of tons of scenery. The device is immensely effective. The costuming and lighting are no less on the side of eloquently expressive impressionism. As the program frankly states, the Messrs. Piscator and Tuttle, two admirable craftsmen, have attempted only "to show the framework of a great chronicle play." They have achieved their common end with amazingly fruitful results.

The most conspicuous honors of the performance are preponderantly Miss Rainer's. But not alone to her are due the composite highlights of an illuminating and novel evening in the theater. Although a pseudo-professional group engaged in other pursuits during their waking hours, the members of Washington's Civic Theater render yeomen's service in support of the star. Especially effective, I thought, were the Robert de Beaudricourt, of C. Kenneth Banghart; the Archbishop of Rheims, of Rudolph Justice Watson; the Dauphin of Ted Tenley; Richard Kreutzburg's Dunois, the bastard of Orleans; Austin Gattis' the Earle of Warwick and the progressively impressive Canon de Stogumber, so efficiently limned by Mason Wright. Murray Sheehan, as the Inquisitor, and Lawrence Geraghty were two more who lent Miss Rainer something of the artistic reenforcement which her fine impersonation demanded—and received.

Here, in short, is a signal triumph of local thespianism over imposts of staggering dimensions.

"Saint Joan" will continue throughout the week at the Belasco, with matinees on Wednesday and Saturday. It deserves the patronage of every Washingtonian with any sense of pride in his city and what it is able to do in furtherance of the highest reaches of distinguished drama.

Heurich Downs Clippers, 33-32, in Playoff

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Orlando, Fla., March 10.—On a train bound for Washington out of Cincinnati on an October evening last year, American League Umpire Bill McGowan sat slouched in an observation car chair staring fixedly at an empty seat across the way. He was the picture of a person lost in thought.

POVICH

"Wake up," said a Washington newspaperman, similarly bound home from the 1939 World Series, "come to life."

Startled out of his reveries, McGowan blinked, shrugged his shoulders. "Jeez," he said, "I was just thinking about Charley Keller."

At that precise moment, several million other people in the United States were also thinking of Charley Keller, no doubt. The Yankees had just licked the Cincinnati Reds in four straight games. A home run by Charley Keller that day had launched the decisive Yankee victory. The afternoon before, two home runs off Keller's bat had begun to transform the World Series into a rout. The rookie Keller was the batting hero of the series, a new idol of the big leagues.

McGowan began to explain. "I was just thinking what a sweet hitter that Keller is. I don't know how they ever get him out. I've been in this league a long time and he's the most vicious guy with a bat in his hands I ever saw. Why, he scares those pitchers. That kid's just bad news. I'd like to have his future."

And we were just thinking that the only guy in the American League with a fair chance to move Joe Di Maggio out of the league batting championship is this same Keller. The Yankees may be 1-to-4 to win the pennant in 1940, but an equally safe risk at this time appears to be a wager that either Di Maggio or Keller will end up as the 1940 batting champion

The best hitter in baseball last year was indubitably Joe DiMaggio. He led the league with a .381 average. Standing at the plate with his clam, flat-footed stance, he slugged all types of pitching. In his four years in the big leagues no pitcher was ever able to detect his weakness, if any. Buck Newsom once boasted he knew the secret. "I'll find his weakness," said Newsom before taking the mound one day at Yankee Stadium. He did, in a sense. DiMaggio showed a decided weakness for two-base hits—he made three of 'em.

Four batters outhit Charley Keller last season—DiMaggio, Jimmy Foxx and Bob Johnson among them. But Keller was a spanking fifth with his .334 average. He figures to improve off that performance. The evidence is that if Charley Keller is a flash in the pan, so was Ty Cobb. The stocky, dark-browed fellow from the University of Maryland has hit in every league he ever played.

In college baseball, his batting average hovered around the .500 mark. In the Coastal Plains League in Carolina, where he played summer ball, he led the league with a .450 average. He stepped directly into the International League from the campus and led that league in his first season with a .353 average. The following year he didn't lead the league, but he batted .365.

He has been the kind of a batter that baseball men say "will hit in the dark." Meeting the ball is merely an adjunct of the Keller batting average. There are other factors. He is the problem child of the outfielders because he hits to all fields. They are strictly guessing when they attempt to "play" Keller. There was an idea at the start of last season that he was strictly a left-field hitter. When his hits started dropping in center and right, a lot of mistakes were realized. When they no longer shaded him to left, he hit to left.

Did you ever see the Keller wrists? They're worth looking at. They are beautiful only in the sense of betokening power and steel-spring action. Otherwise they are thick and hairy. But they are, undoubtedly, the secret of the Keller hitting talent—those wrists and, of course, a tolerable sort of batting eye.

But he'll get hits where Joe Di Maggio won't and precious few other hefty sluggers will. Because Keller, a left-handed batter, makes the most of his two-step start toward first base. On any ground ball that he hits, he's dynamite with the speed he generates down to first base. He makes infielders hustle their throws and precipitates errors that may not benefit his batting average but certainly help his team.

There is no telling what the Keller batting figure for 1939 may have been had he played in more than 111 games, but it is a safe presumption that it would have been much higher than the .334 he did hit. He was off to such a slow start in the spring that Manager Joe McCarthy benched him against left-handed pitching, what with his average below the .225 mark. But when he started to hit in midseason he was no less than a ball of fire, batting considerably over .400 to bring his average up to fifth place in the league.

We're meaning to say that Charley Keller is no Jeff Heath. You remember him, perhaps. He was the sensational rookie with the Cleveland Indians who batted .343 in 1938 and was hailed as a coming batting champion. Last year Jeff Heath hit a modest .292. The pitchers got to know him. We're thinking that the better they know Charley Keller, the less they'll like him—professionally speaking.

With CONSIDINE

Nassau, British West Indies, March 10.—Thirty miles out from here in the turquoise Caribbean rests a splinter of land known as Whale Cay, where in tropical grandeur a former denizen of the sports pages has set up a kind of isolated kingdom, or perhaps it is a queendom.

CONSIDINE

She is Betty Carstairs, the rich, eccentric British girl who once challenged Gar Wood for the Harmsworth Trophy and gave the builder of the Miss Americas a run for his dough, as we recall. She challenged with a single-engined water meteor which she drove so audaciously that it ripped out its innards—but not before she established herself as about the coolest, most stout-hearted babe the sport pages have known.

She has become a legend around these parts, though she is still on the pleasanter side of 40, and despite the fact that she has been on Whale Cay only five years. Some of the natives think she is a frighteningly severe white goddess with power over life and death. There is a story around that not long ago she had one of the natives on Whale Cay horsewhipped and when the lacerated fellow appealed to a British court, here, he was told that Miss Carstairs was a law unto herself. There are stories, too, of the fine cultural enlightenment she has brought to her subjects.

It is difficult to check up on these stories about her. She permits no visitors to land on her island, except those brought by her friends. And few of those who manage to get to Whale Cay ever see her. She gives no interviews. She abhors reporters and many are the ruses they have used to try to get to her to piece together her story. You appreciate how difficult she and her idyllic retreat are to approach when you learn that one of the most gifted members of our craft, Eleanor Patterson, thought of flying over there and causing the motor of her plane to die out, thus bringing about a forced landing and leaving Miss Carstairs with little opportunity to deny landing privileges.

We probably have no right to stick our long boney nose into her private affairs, but she appears to be a reigning mystery down here, and the most bizarre person in an Archipelago which houses such interesting figures as retired rum runners who have become fabulously rich and honored as well as Sir Harry Oakes who was kicked off a train in Canada years ago, for bumming a ride, and stumbled upon a gold deposit which has made him one of the world's richest men and Brenda Frazier, Greta Garbo and other esteemed natives and immigrants.

Sir Harry can put in a stiff day's work driving one of the tractors he is using to trample down the jungle; Brenda can go swimming with Mr. Shipwreck Kelly, and Garbo roamed happily around the village with her dietician. No one notices or noticed.

But a good percentage of the folks who went to the agricultural fair last week went in the hope of seeing the slim, slick-haired Betty Carstairs, who exhibited some of the fruits she raised on Whale Cay. Few succeeded in seeing her. As far as is known no reporter dared trying to get chatty with her.

The Hon. Harold Christie, who owns a lot of this part of the world, sold Whale Cay to Miss Carstairs for something in the neighborhood of 20,000 pounds. It is 4 miles long and a little over a thousand acres. At the time of the sale there was only a fishing lodge on the place. But since Miss Carstairs came with her speedboats and great fortune, there has risen a fine home, an Anglican church presided over by the Rev. W. G. Henshaw, many small dwellings, a school, playhouses, workshops, police dog kennels and 6 miles of roads.

The population has upped to 200 and the literacy rate is extremely high. She has a colored Boy Scout troop, and has given the natives opportunities to learn trades they never possibly could have mastered. The only apparent reason she gave up the social whirl in London is that she tired of the whole business of civilization and simply turned her back on it.

Those here who have business dealings with her, during her speedboat trips to Nassau, speak of her with awe. They say she is shrewd, sharp and has a positive decisiveness about her. But the thing that seems to awe them most is the fact that there seems to be no square inch of her arms and legs and chest that has not submitted to the picturesque needle of a tattoo artist.

Goldfadden Leads Locals' Early Scoring

Clippers Suffer 1st Defeat in Play-Off Games Here; Bender, Esposito Lead Balto.

One of the most exciting finishes of the American Basketball League season yesterday found the Washington Heurich Brewers barely nosing out the Baltimore Clippers in a thrill-jammed American Basketball League play-off series game at Heurich gymnasium, 33 to 32.

It was Baltimore's first defeat of the post season play-off and the finest game of the local season, from a spectator's standpoint.

The sensational sharpshooting of Ben Goldfadden, Heurich forward, had sent the Brewers ahead at the first period, 13 to 4, and enabled them to maintain a 20-14 margin at the second rest period.

Upon resumption of play, however, the Clippers broke loose with a bewildering attack that all but swept the locals off their feet.

Bob Bollerman Scores

Bob Bollerman, Baltimore's big center, started it with two successive baskets from well past midcourt to hike the score to 18-20. Rabin made it 21-18, Washington, on a free throw, but a charity shot by Jules Bender and scrimmage shot by Al Esposito knotted the count at 21-all.

Baltimore stepped out in front at this point when Bender, Nash and Bollerman connected with successive baskets to send their team into a 27-23 mastery and the Washington defense appeared shot to pieces.

The Brewers proved their mettle at this point, however, when Rabin, Bloom and Kramer scored rapid fire tosses from the floor and Rabin followed with a foul conversion to put Washington ahead at 32-27.

Conaty Impressive

"Red" Conaty, playing one of his finest games of the year, made good on a free throw and Esposito came through with a field goal to send Baltimore within a 30-32 count.

Art Resnick made it 33-30 on a foul conversion, but Bender came back in the fading seconds with another scrimmage shot to send the Clippers within a 32-33 count. The Clippers missed several shots by inches in the last minute.

Ben Goldfadden, Washington's fast improving star, scored ten of his team's first 13 points and played his finest game of the year while accounting for 14 points. Phil Rabin accounted for 9 points, all in the pinch.

United Clay Products defeated the Petworth A. C. in an overtime preliminary, 48-46.

Hoya Nine Starts Practice Today

Georgetown University's first call for baseball candidates will be sounded at the Hilltop today when batterymen are called out for the first time.

Coach Joe Judge will be greeted by a great majority of last year's veterans and will also greet many newcomers from last year's freshman club.

Although Judge will send his players through spirited drills within the next few days, practices will not speeded up to their highest pitch until after the Easter Holidays.

10,387 Fans Watch New York Win Amid Four Fist Fights

By the Associated Press

New York, March 10.—The New York Rovers made it two straight over River Vale today with a 3-0 victory in a fast, exciting Eastern Amateur Hockey League game at Madison Square Garden. The triumph sent the Rovers back into second place ahead of "the Washington Eagles."

The Rovers kept the puck in enemy territory throughout most of the first two periods and only the excellent goal tending of Gordie Hemming prevented a larger score.

During the third period the teams became embroiled in four fist fights to the evident delight of the 10,387 fans. Swede Shoquist and Gus Portland were the chief offenders for the Skeeters and Mitch Pechet, Frankie Parker, Howie Hollinger and Len Loree for the Red Shirts. Portland and Loree were each given 10-minute misconduct penalties.

The line-ups:

Nelson and Mangrum Lead at Thomasville

Both Card 68s in First Round of $3,000 Golf Tourney; Herman Kaiser Registers 69; Final 36 Holes Billed for Today

By the Associated Press

Thomasville, Ga., March 10.—By pulling off some marvelous shots that struck the gallery's fancy, National Open Champion Byron Nelson of Toledo, Ohio, and Lloyd Mangrum of Oak Park, Ill., deadlocked today for the lead in the first round of the $3,000 Thomasville Open Golf Tournament.

Scoring neat 68's, four under par for the opening 18-hole round of the 54-hole competition, Nelson and Mangrum held a one-stroke lead over the field, with Herman Kaiser, of Akron, Ohio, in third position with a 69. The 36 holes were billed for Monday.

While spectacular shots helped Nelson and Mangrum to share the lead, the national champion flubbed a putt of less than a foot at the fourteenth hole that would have given him sole command. Kaiser was victim of an unplayable lie that cost him two shots at the seventh hole and a possible chance for the lead.

Nelson, after his drive struck a tree and fell into the rough at the fifteenth, played an intentional hook with a No. 4 iron that sailed beautifully to the green and he got his par. Mangrum's tee shot at the seventh hole was in the woods and he had to play out to the fairway. He planted a brassie third shot 12 feet from the cup and sank it for a birdie 4.

In fourth place with a sub-par 70 was Paul Runyan, of White Plains, N. Y. He had nine of 37-33. Nelson, the winner here a year ago of the top prize of $750, had a pair of 34's. Mangrum and Kaiser had the best individual nines of the day, each clipping four strokes off par on the incoming side with 32's.

Equaling the Glen Arven course's par of 71 and tied for fifth place were Craig Wood, of Winged Foot, N. Y., and E. J. (Dutch) Harrison, of Little Rock, Ark. Bracketed at 72 were amateur Tommy Barnes, of Atlanta, and five professionals—Jimmy McHale, of Saranac Inn, N. Y.; Ted Luther, of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Stanley Horne, of Montreal, Can.; Felix Serafin, of Scranton, Pa., and Vincent Eldred, of Pittsburgh, Pa.

Sammy Snead, of Shawnee, Pa., who "blew" the National Open title last summer with an 8 on the last hole, fell victim of another disastrous 8 here, taking that number of strokes on the par 4 first hole and finishing with a 76. Jimmy Thomson, of Chicopee, Mass., also needed 76 shots.

CIAA Stars Meet Union Five Here Wednesday

A high-class basketball offering is in store for local fans Wednesday night at Heurich gym when the Colored Intercollegiate Athletic Association All-Conference team meets Union University, twice winner of the CIAA title.

This will mark the first time a CIAA all-star team has played as a group. One Howard University player, Jimmy Paker, of this city, is on the All-Conference squad. Tallest member of the All-stars is 6-foot 11 Norbert Downing from North Carolina State College.

Union, featuring the greatest star in CIAA history, captain and forward Wiley (Soupy) Campbell, split even in a two-game series with Long Island last year.

'Griff' Turns Thumbs Down On Night Ball

'Prohibitive Price' To Install Lights Given as Reason

By a Staff Correspondent

Orlando, Fla., March 10.—The lights are out as far as night baseball in Griffith Stadium is concerned. Clark Griffith, owner of the Nats, today thundered an emphatic "No!" to proposals calling for the installation of a lighting system this season.

After apparently being won to the innovation, the Washington club owner suddenly declared that he was scrapping all plans for night baseball in his ball park due to what he called "a prohibitive price."

With some heat, Griffith told newspapermen: "It's a holdup game by the lighting people. I won't stand for any such figure. They were overpaid by Connie Mack and Lou Comiskey last year, but I'll never put in the lights until they quote me a reasonable price."

Lowest Bid $123,000

Griffith revealed that the lowest bid for a lighting system in his stadium was $123,000. "With the engineer's commission it would amount to close to $130,000. That's too much for the seven games of night ball the league permits each club at home."

The sudden change in the Nats owner's plans for lights followed a conference with Business Manager Edward B. Eynon, jr., who made a special trip from Washington to Orlando to present the contractor's latest estimates. Mr. Eynon, long a foe of night baseball, agreed heartily with Griffith's final decision.

Griffith declared that a lighting system last summer had most Connie Mack $108,000. "Even that was too much," he said.

Need More Lights

Electrical contractors had pointed out to Griffith that owing to the dimensions of the Washington stadium which encloses the largest playing surface in either league, a more elaborate lighting system was demanded.

Negotiations with the contractors had been carried on for several months and only this week it was confidentially revealed by persons in authority that Griffith was planning to inaugurate the night games in July of this season.

Griffith poo-poohed the suggestion that his diatribe against the cost of night ball was a maneuver to win a reduction in price. "I'm not completely in favor of night ball, anyway," he said. "And I'm perfectly satisfied to keep the lights out of my park forever."

Nat Farm Holdout Comes to Terms

Orlando, Fla., March 10.—Jim Dean, a prospective Washington pitcher now assigned to the Nats' Calvin Griffith, came to terms with Charlotte farm, came to terms with Calvin Griffith, Charlotte president, tonight, ending a holdout siege of more than three weeks.

Dean, a tall righthander who pressed Sid Hudson for the pitching honors in the Florida League last year, is regarded as one of the brighter prospects among the Nats' rookie crop. He was bought last season from Sanford of the Florida League after winning 21 games and losing only 4. The season before, he had a dazzling string of 17 consecutive victories with Sanford.

Catcher Giuliani Now a Proud Father

Catcher Angelo Giuliani of the Nats today is the proud father of an 8-pound boy. The baby was born yesterday at Georgetown Hospital where the mother and new member are reported as doing fine. Giuliani arrived yesterday from the Nats' Orlando camp and will leave; later in the week to resume training.

Big Money, Higher Ranking Aim of Furr in Bout Tonight

Big money, a high place in the National Boxing Association's welterweight rankings and a final chance for the fight fame he couldn't gain in his prime, will be the goals of Phil Furr tonight when he faces Kenny LaSalle, world's fifth-ranking welter, in the ten-round main affair in Turner's Arena.

Furr, after seven straight victories since he began his comeback last fall, will be up against "big-time" opposition for the first time in LaSalle.

LaSalle is the lazy-working right-hand puncher who defeated Steve Mamakos in Griffith Stadium last summer. He'll be favored tonight at about 7-to-5 odds to halt Phil's winning streak.

Furr, as underdog, will be at a slight advantage. He has much more to lose by losing than has LaSalle. Apparently in perfect shape, Phil is at a keen mental edge for his battle, but no matter how he looks at it he doesn't stack up to defeat the Houston, Tex., product—at least, on paper. Anything can happen in a fight ring, however.

Victory Means Better Ranking

A coveted place in the N. B. A.'s "first 10" 147-pounders can be Phil's if he defeats LaSalle, President Heinie Miller has announced. Furr, who met all the old-timers, hit the down grade after his defeat at the hands of Champion Barney Ross. Once ranked among the top welterweights, he is making a determined try at 29, the age when most fighters are sitting by the fireside reading their clippings.

PHIL FURR

LaSalle, who prides himself on his stone-wall defense, expressed confidence he will stop Furr—possibly by a knockout.

Although Furr has never been knocked off his feet by any of the seven men he has defeated in rapid order, he is not invincible. He was rocked and badly hurt by a wild-swinging Rumanian, Milo Theodorescu.

Only two times in the past two years has LaSalle handled by Sam (The Mumbler) Sobol, been upset. He was decisioned by the Cocoa Kid and Fritzie Zivic, two top-notchers, and has since defeated Zivic in a return.

Joey Spangler, One Victim

Furr's "imposing" record since his comeback debut includes Joey Spangler, Nat Kadin, Frankie Wills, El Brookman, Milo Theodorescu and Bobby Malone.

Each time Phil has boasted of vaunted new power in his right hand, once broken in a fight. In his last battle, however, he hardly used it at all. Whether he was saving it for bigger game remains to be seen, but it looks like Phil's night to bow back out.

Preliminaries, beginning at 8:30 p. m., feature Toby Tobias, veteran Washington campaigner, in a return bout against El Brookman in the eight-round semifinal. Another eight brings Wild Bill McDowell, Texas product, against Vic Vinazzo, of Baltimore.

Two Washington colored boys, Buddy Holmes and Sammy Williams, fight in a four-rounder.

Washington Wins Game in Eighth As Lewis, Travis Hit; Krakky Star

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent

Orlando, Fla., March 10.—To the delight of 3,600 Orlando citizens who shattered all attendance marks for Tinker Field this perfect afternoon, Washington's new-model ball club surged from behind and whacked a 5-4 victory out of the New York Giants.

Cecil Travis and Buddy Lewis, the Nats' inseparable roommates, who look alike, think alike and wear like clothes, delivered similar blows against the pitching of Cliff Melton in the eighth inning and the winning run trotted home on their singles.

Technically, the Nats were outhit, 10 to 7, but mixed up in those seven Washington hits were two potent home runs—a second-inning slam to center field by Gerald Walker, and a vicious drive in the third by Jimmy Wasdell which set the natives to babbling and wondering if a longer home run had ever been hit in Tinker Feild.

Wasdell's wallop, delivered with a man on base at a time when the Nats were trailing by a 2-1 score, was a mountainous clout into right field that landed at the base of the fence 450 feet distant.

The Nat's victory was achieved against three of Bill Terry's regular pitchers—Gumbert, Hy Vandenberg and Melton.

Six of the Giant's ten hits were achieved against the rookie right hander, Paul Gehrman, who was making no impressive debut on the mound for the Nats. But there was pitching balm for Manager Harris in the exhibition of two other of his young man, Sid Hudson and Joe Krakauskas.

Hudson Looks Good

Hudson, the preseason pet of the Nats' rookie pitching crop, stepped boldly to the mound to face a big league club for the first time in his life and turned in a clever three-inning job.

The tall right hander disposed of the first six men to face him in rapid order, but in the third he surrendered three hits and a pair of runs. One of the runs was distinctly unearned, spawning from an error by Jimmy Bloodworth.

Krakauskas was the pitching star of the Nats. Whipping a crackling fast ball across the plate with surprising control, he yielded only one hit in his three-inning turn, but that happened to be a homer by John Dickshot.

Gerald Walker moved the Nats into a 1-0 lead in the second inning when he powdered one of Gumbert's pitches far into the bushes in centerfield for a ground-rules homer. It was a line drive that skipped between the outfielders in great haste.

The Giants suddenly fell on Hudson in the third inning to move in front, 2-1, after Stewart and Witek led off with singles. The latter's was a scratchy blow off Hudson's glove. At this point, with an easy double play in view, Bloodworth muffed Gumbert's grounder and a run scored. Jurges drove in the second run of the inning with a hot drive that caromed off Hudson's glove.

Gumpert was fortunate to hold the Nats to two runs in the third. After Wasdell's home run drive had scored Johnny Welaj ahead of himself, Buddy Lewis pounded a terrific double to right and Walker rapped a long liner to left which Jo-Joe Moore hauled down to avert further damage.

Giants Forge Ahead

Dickshot's homer tied the score at 3-3 in the sixth and in the seventh the Giants took a 1-run lead when McCarthy, Whitehead and Melton singled against Gehrman. But Jimmy Bloodworth and Rick Ferrell singled in the seventh to tie the score at 4-4.

There were indications that the Giants would score again in the eighth when Rucker singled and Ott followed with a single to left, but the over-ambitious Rucker attempted to take third on the latter blow and Gee Walker's throw to Travis cut him down.

Rucker was no help to the Giants in the eighth, either. After Lewis had singled to center, the Giants' outfielder bobbled the ball on the hop, and Lewis raced to second on the error. Then, after Walker had flied to center for the second out, along came Travis with his game-winning single.

A. A. U. Fives Open Second Week of Championship Play At Heurich Gym

Already productive of many point-for-point battles, the District A. A. U. championship basketball tournament gathers momentum this week as the fields narrow, particularly in the well-matched unlimited class. The second week begins with a renewal of a rivalry which flared in the quarter-finals last year. At 9:30 tonight, at Heurich's gymnasium, scene of all the tournament games, Jewish Community Center will tackle Interior Department.

J. C. C., coached as usual by Everett Russell, has an unusually strong team that has been prominent in league circles this winter. The Sixteenth Street club played some of the best basketball in the 1939 tournament while led by Sid Karp, winner of the Sprigman medal for the highest scorer in the unlimited class.

Interior also was in the thick of last year's titular struggle. The Government team will pack its usual Indian punch and will be out to eliminate J. C. C.

Karp means to collect another Sprigman medal, but not at the expense of teamwork. He will have to be in best form, however. Joe Walters, of Petworth, has 28 points for a single game and Jerry Zanelotti turned in 32 for the Central Boys Club last Saturday night.

Y. M. C. A. in Action

On tonight's program, the Art Welders will meet Friendship in what should prove a 145-pound thriller at 7:30. An hour later Y. M. C. A., always a tourney threat, will make its debut against the formidable Hyattsville Business Men.

Tuesday night will bring a second-round unlimited class game that should give tournament fans something to talk about. The United Typewriters, winners of the 1939 title and long prominent in court ranks hereabouts, will tackle the Petworth A. C., winner over Theta Delta Chi, 59-24, in its first-round game. These rivals have met twice in league battles this winter and Petworth has given a good fight on both occasions.

If Joe Walters can continue anything near the form he showed in the first game, Petworth believes it can turn back the mighty Typewriters.

The Tuesday program appears to be the best so far in the struggle for city titles being sponsored by The Washington Post. In addition to the United Typewriter-Petworth game, Bolling Field and Mount Vernon, old rivals, will clash.

In addition, Interior and J. C. C., this time in the 145-pound division, are scheduled to stage another of their "naturals."

Girls Play Thursday

For the first time, girls' teams will play on the Thursday night card, which will be featured by a battle between Federal Bureau of Investigation and Greenbelt in the second round. FBI has another of those many strong clubs turned out by G-men in recent years. Greenbelt earned respect by defeating Treasury last week by a 1-point margin.

The girls' game will involve Treasury and Veterans Administration. Rockville, many times A. A. U. champions, is not entered this year. Several of the former Rockville stars are playing with Treasury.

Heurich Gymnasium is located at Twenty-sixth and D streets northwest. Admission to each night's program is 25 cents.

Old Dominion Sweepstakes Won by Smith

John Romick Second By One Pin in Record Field at Rosslyn

Leonard Smith's 713 total stood up for the Old Dominion Sweepstakes championship yesterday at Rosslyn alleys, but only after John Romick, of Winchester, Va., one of the last of the record field of 246 to roll, came within a single stick of a tie.

Smith posted a 698 pinfall, plus a 15-pin handicap for 713 late Saturday night, the first day of the event. Tony Santini, Ed Blakeney and Al Wright all had chances to beat him as nearly 150 bowlers competed yesterday, but Romick supplied the final thrill with his after midnight finish when he spared in the tenth box, needed a 10 count to win and 9 to tie—and scored 8. His last two games were 164 and 134.

Smith Collects $150

Smith collected $150 for his first place finish, while Romick's 658, plus a 54-pin handicap was good for $90. Santini's 708 from scratch was worth third prize of $50, while Reds Megaw, another late finisher, posted 679 for the five games, with a 24-pin handicap for fourth prize of $40. An even 700 from scratch earned fifth place and $30 for Blankeney.

Derwood Boeglen, a Rosslyn bowler, was in sixth place with 664-30, 694, while Buster Mahoney, of Herndon, Va., was seventh with 649-41, 690, and Al Wright, of the Banker's League, eighth with 680-9. 689. Waynesboro's leading bowler, Cletus Pannel, jr., rolled 655 with a 33-pin handicap for 688, while others bound to finish among the money winners included Walter Perrell, 648-39, 687; Mario Kidwell, 645-39, 684, Clief Lovett, 636-42, 678, and Karl Gochenour, 668-9, 677.

Galt Davis drew an alltime record entry of 246 for the 2-day mixed tourney and the field competed for $600 in cash prizes and an additional $100 in merchandise awards, more than 60 prizes in all.

Leading Women

First among the women bowlers and trailing Gochenour by a single pin was Lucy Rose, Rosslyn's District League star, with 652-24, 676, and Julia Young, of the Red Circle team in the same league, with 613-63, 676. Also in line for the special women's prizes were Hazel Funkhauser, 570-83, 633; Peggy McCarty, 553-72, 625; Doris Sencindiver, 534-75, 619, and C. Hauser, 560-57, 617.

Prizes ranged from $150 to sixteenth prize of 29 for the men, while the women had three special prizes of $15, $10 and $5 in addition to consolation game and block awards for both.

Typewriter Five Defeats Delhuds, 29-26

Clinton Price's youthful United Typewriter basketball team last night annexed the Heurich Amateur Basketball League's championship when it turned back Delaware and Hduson in the third, and final, game of a play-off series at Heurich gymnasium, 29 to 26.

Last night's victory for the Typewriters terminated a monopoly long exercised over Heurich Amateur Basketball League title competition by two clubs, namely: D. and H. and Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Immediately after the game it was announced that Ollie Tipton, key man of the Typewriters, had been selected as the Heurich League player most valuable to his club and will be awarded a trophy emblematic of the honor at a dinner planned by the League shortly.

United Typewriters set a fast pace at the outset last night and were leading at half-time, 20 to 9.

D. and H. came back strong in the last half and made a great fight of it down to the final whistle.

Len Stanton and Tipton set a hot pace for the Typewriters while Akky Viana and Clint Quantrille were high scorers for D. and H.

Budge Defeats Tilden in Pro Tennis Benefit

By the Associated Press

New York, March 10.—Young Don Budge tonight proved his mastery over Old Bill Tilden by a 7—5, 6—2 margin as some 5,500 watched the first meeting of the two tennis titans in New York. The exhibition was staged for the Finnish relief fund.

Some of the crowd paid as much as $10 a seat for the privilege of getting a fleeting glimpse of the Tilden of old, as he uncorked his famed cannon-ball service and made a few disapproving gesticulations at umpires' decisions—but most of all they saw the magnificent Budge unreel the dazzling brand of tennis that has made him the most feared figure on the world's courts.

The first set was a corker with both holding service for the first eight games. With the games at 5-all, Budge cracked Tilden's service for four straight points and on his own serve crashed through with three sizzling service aces to win the last two games at love.

The second set was all Budge, the tiring Tilden was able to win only the first and the fifth games.

Prior to the feature, Fred Perry crushed a disappointing Ellsworth Vines, himself a former Wimbledon and American champion, 6—1, 6—4, and Bruce Barnes beat Berkley Bell in an All-Texas one-set match, 6—2.

3 National Records Fall In Swim Meet

Brenda Heker Wins 220-Yard Freestyle In Women's Finals

By the United Press

Miami Beach, Fla., March 10.—Brenda Helser, 15-year-old Portland, Oreg., high school girl, featured a record-shattering conclusion to the women's national A. A. U. indoor swimming meet today by splashing to victory in the 220-yard freestyle.

There were three events on the final day's program and a new national record was set in each.

The tiny Portland girl lopped two and one-tenth seconds off the standing records of 2:32.4, set by Halina Tomska Tullis, Chicago, in 1938, in Los Angeles. She stroked to an easy victory in the freestyle sprint over a field that included the former record holder.

Miss Helser was timed in 2:30.3. She was trailed by Dorothy Leonard, Worcester, Mass.; Mrs. Tullis and 13-year-old Nancy Merki, Portland, Oreg.

Nineteen-year-old Helen Crlenkovich, San Francisco springboard star, was the only champion to make a successful title defense and, in winning the 10-foot diving event again, ran up a record point score of 146.77. She held the old record of 144.

Barbara Cook, Jeffersonville, Ind., was second in the high board diving competition, Ann Ross, Brooklyn, N. Y., third, and Helen Brenner, Brooklyn, fourth.

The third new record was set in the 300-yard medley relay by Gloria Callen, Elizabeth Ryan and Lorraine Fischer, who represented the Women's Swimming Association of New York. Their time of 3:28.6 was 1 4-10 seconds better than the old mark.

The W. S. A. trio won by a long margin over the Los Angeles Athletic Club team, which finished second. The Multnomah Club of Portland, Oreg., was third.

Individual honors in the three-day meet went to Dorothy Leonard. Although she did not win a single event, she was second twice and third twice. Team honors were won by the W. S. A. with a total of 36 points. The Multnomah Club was second with 24.

Allan Burton Given New 3-Year Contract

ALLAN BURTON

Army and Navy Pro Gets One of Longest Appointments Ever Made in Vicinity; M. B. Dale Scores Ace at Service Club

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Allan Burton, golf professional at the Army and Navy Club for the past eight years, was extended a vote of confidence by the Executive Committee yesterday in the form of a new three-year contract.

Burton's contract is one of the longest ever given a pro in this section, as the positions are usually on a year-to-year basis. Additional benefits to the service club professional were not included in the papers.

Burton also announced the appointment of Eddie Lightbown as assistant pro, starting March 15. Lightbown formerly worked at Chevy Chase.

The Army-Navy club pro celebrated his contract by playing 36 holes over the inside nine in 1 over par figures. With Allan B. Prossie, sr., and jr., he scored a pair of 36s for a 72 in the morning and was 1 over par with a 73 while playing with Commander Phillips in the afternoon.

M. B. Dale scored the first hole-in-one of the year at Army-Navy yesterday, dropping a 153-yard shot on the eighth hole of the inside nine. Dale was playing with William Myers, Major Elliott and Major Freeman.

BEAVER DAM

Al Houghton isn't wasting any time in his new job as Beaver Dam professional. The Bedford Open champion has already approached the club officials on the possibilities of holding the District Open at the Landover Club, and has several other tourneys in mind. He also signed two new members that will be welcome additions to the golf team, Turner Smith, former Belle Haven champion, and Art Cross, prominent public links golfer, who won the York pro-amateur last year, with Mel Shorey as a partner.

Houghton played his first round over the course yesterday with "Pop" Rodgers, Jess Baggett and J. A. Woodside, and tried to play the best ball of the threesome but lost on the eighteenth hole.

MANOR

Mel Shipley, one of Indian Spring's star golfers for a number of years, found the competition a little stiff in his first time out as a Manor Club member yesterday.

Playing with Greens Committee Chairman Ralph Gibson against Max Taylor and Harry Pitt, boss of the golf committee, Shipley found things going his way as he and Gibson turned the first nine, 4 up.

But the second nine was a different story as Taylor and Pitt turned on the heat and won, 1 up, erasing the four-hole lead by playing the last two holes in two under par, with Taylor supplying the birdies.

INDIAN SPRING

Mel Shorey, playing the Indian Spring course for the first time since his appointment as professional last Thursday, recommended two changes while playing the nine-hole layout with Earl Clary, chairman of the board of governors, and Golf Committee Chairman John Feeney. The twelfth hole may be changed to a par 5 from a new tee to be built, and played the second time around. The fifteenth hole will be cut down to a par 4, making par 36 on each nine from the different tees.

KENWOOD

A. S. Bain, chairman of the Kenwood golf committee, has called a meeting for Tuesday night to draw up a season's schedule.

DIVOT DATA

Tommy Doerer, jr., who gave the public links golfers a new deal in tournament play and activities the past two seasons, has a big 1940 schedule, with several surprises, all mapped out, awaiting the O. K. of his boss, S. G. Loeffler . . . The first Middle Atlantic P. G. A. meeting of the season has been called for Manor a week from tomorrow, golf weather permitting . . . Al Jamison was guest of honor in an informal get-together at Bradley Hills Thursday night . . . It's Al Houghton's turn next Sunday at Beaver Dam . . . Tom Doerer has called a meeting of the East Potomac Golf Club for Friday night to settle preliminary arrangements for the season . . . The Rodgers Forge Club, in Baltimore, scene of the Washington-Baltimore team match, is now called "Terra Mariae."

Eastern Five Meets Riders In Met Finals

Interhigh Champion Favored in Tonight's Game in Tech Gym

Roosevelt High School, holder of the interhigh basketball series championship for the first time since 1919, goes after its second major title of the season tonight, meeting Eastern at Tech Gym in the finals of the Metropolitan Tournament.

In a 7:30 preliminary Bethesda and Hyattsville will meet for the girls' title. The boys' game is scheduled to go on about 8:30.

Roosevelt's Rough Riders, twice conquerors of Eastern in the interhigh competition, will be slightly favored to turn the trick again although there are many who believe Eastern is overdue to crash through with a victory. In both of their previous games there was little to choose between the teams, Roosevelt winning the first, 38-33, and the second, 35-32.

Tonight as in almost every one of its games this season the Lincoln Parkers, who were runners-up to Roosevelt in the inter-high series, will be counting heavily on Bob (Gun) Custer, sharp-eyed forward. Custer for the last two weeks has hit a terrific scoring pace. In Eastern's two starts in the Metropolitan Tournament he ran up twin totals of 22 points.

Roosevelt will feature a trio of stars in George West, Hymie Perlo and Ernest Travis who have alternated all season at leading the Rough Riders' attack.

Clarence Zimmer and Len Walker were best for the Washingtonians with 387 and 374, respectively, while Everett Johnson led Richmond with 169 and 378.

Major League All-Stars Beat Coast Team

Picked Nine Loses, 4-1, In Benefit Game; Other Baseball News

By International News Service

Los Angeles, March 10.—Twenty-nine major league baseball players, hand selected from the White Sox, Cubs, Pirates and Athletics, today combined to defeat, 4 to 1, a picked team of Pacific Coast League outfits waining in southern California.

Ten thousand persons saw the contest at Wrigley Field. Proceeds went to the Finnish Relief Fund.

There was a gallant array of talent on hand, but Elby Fletcher, Pirate first baseman, was the only player in the game to come up with more than ont hit.

The Coast leaguers used five pitchers who gave up 11 hits. All were singles with the exception of Pirate Young's double in the eighth.

Nine pitchers, one each inning, appeared for the major leaguers. They were Ted Lyons, White Sox; Bill Lee, Claude Passeau and Julio Bonetti, Cubs; Bob Klinger, Pirates; George Castor, Athletics; Thornton Lee, White Sox; Johnny Gee and Mace Brown, Pirates. They were touched for six singles.

San Bernardino, Cali., March 10 (AP).—The Pittsburgh Pirates enjoyed a day of rest today while Manager Frankie Frisch mapped a full program for Monday and Tuesday.

All players will get a crack sliding in the sand pit, and pitchers will go through double sessions of batting and catching runners at the bases on each of the two days.

REDS

Tampa, Fla., March 10 (AP).—Out side of Paul Derringer, the Cincinnati Reds couldn't find the right pitcher today and the Boston Red Sox outhanged them for a 13-10 Grapefruit League victory.

Derringer worked in his usual form, but Bucky Walters and three others did little to stop the American leaguers from giving the Reds their third straight spring defeat.

Dominick Di Maggio, the Sox' $75,000 rookie outfielder, sprained his right ankle sliding into the plate in the eighth.

YANKS

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 10 (AP).—A home-run by Joe (Flash) Gordon with one out and none on in the ninth inning provided the margin of an 8 to 7 victory for the New York Yankees today against the St. Louis Cardinals.

This was the second hit the world champions were able to collect after the second inning, when they staged a five-run spree off Bob Bowman.

PHILLIES

Miami Beach, Fla., March 10 (AP).—Morrie Arnovich, the Phillies star outfielder, starred today as the "Boyles" beat the "Hagans" in the first intra-camp game, 6 to 2.

Arnovich drove in three runs on a single, double and homer and made two great catches in the field. His round-tripper came in the first inning off Ik. Pearson with a man on base.

INDIANS

Fort Myers, Fla., March 10 (AP).—The four-hit pitching of Harry Eisenstat and Bill Zuber helped the Cleveland Indians regulars to a 3 to 1 victory over the Rookies today, in the second intra-squad spring training game, a seven-inning affair.

The regulars scored all their runs in the first inning on doubles by Roy Weatherly, Hal Trosky and Jeff Heath and singles by Ken Keltner, Ray Mack and Rollie Hemsley.

BROWNS

San Antonio, Tex., March 10 (AP).—Four thousand free spectators who attended today's intra-squad game at Tech Field where the St. Louis Browns are winding up spring training were treated to some heavy hitting fireworks.

A team captained by Myril Hoag defeated Johnny Lucadello's outfit 11 to 4, for the second straight day.

DODGERS

Lakeland, Fla., March 10 (AP).—The Brooklyn Dodgers suffered their first casualty of the training season today. Peewee Reese, rookie infielder, received a deep cut on his right hand attempting to stop a hard grounder in an exhibition game which the Dodgers lost to the Detroit Tigers, 11-2. Reese may be out two weeks. President Larry MacPhail said he has not yet discussed contracts with Dolph Camilli and Dixie Walker, holdouts who arrived last night.

ATHLETICS

San Diego, Calif., March 10 (AP).—A five-run attack in the second inning, climaxed by Dee Miles' homer with two on, gave the Philadelphia Athletics a 6-to-3 victory over San Diego, of the Pacific Coast League, today. It was the A's sixth win in seven games.

Nelson Potter, Jennings Poindexter and Bill Beckman yielded only five hits to San Diego, one a fly by McDonald that became a homer when Eddie Collins, jr., fell down.

Earle Brucker, A's catcher, received a traveling bag before the game.

The recent fire, which leveled 187 stalls at the Prince Georges County course, has forced some stables to use stalls at Laurel, Pimlico and Marlboro. Shipments have been checked in by Track Supt. Dick Pending from Tropical Park, Hialeah, New Orleans and Oaklawn.

When these arrivals are mixed in the entries with horses which have wintered hereabouts, Bowie racing should provide many longshots. The stay-at-home horses, after being snowed and frozen in during January, have had plenty of time to train of late. Both Bowie and Benning have been the scenes of increased training activity during the past week.

Ring's Horses to Ship

There will be three $5,000 stakes and a $2,500 stake, the later exclusively for two-year-olds, run next month.

REDLAND CLEAN-UP.—T. T. Mott received congratulations on all sides for the way Redland Hunt put on the point-to-point races last Saturday . . . the two accidents were unfortunate . . . Crompton Smith suffered his broken leg while trying to give room to another rider, his mount falling against a tree . . . in the pair race, the Randles went one way of the course and the others took a different route . . . in point-to-point racing, it is necessary to pick up three tokens at different points . . . however, a rider can go as he pleases . . . flat racing was well represented at Redland. . . . Many owners and trainers were among the spectators . . . as were Steeplechase Jockeys King and Penrod . . . Play Pal (or James A.) proved his mettle in the heavyweight race . . . carrying 200 pounds, composed of Judy Johnson and lead, the much-publicized gelding finished in strong fashion . . . after going 6 miles, not 6 furlongs. . . . Louis Randle and his daughter, Martha, are from Howard County . . . Randle's farm adjoins that of Alan Clarke, Maryland breed. . . . Gerald B. Webb, jr., surprised by bringing Longtitude up from Middleburg for the Redland Bowl . . . It was thought his mount would be Easy Mark, winner of three point-to-point races last year . . . however, Longitude, making his racing debut, proved a capable horse . . . he struck the final coop, but Webb held him up to carry off the coveted prize . . . the showing of The Boob was a disappointment to many in the crowd . . . in the heavyweight race John Richards lost a stirrup soon after the start and pulled up . . . The Boob went back in the bowl race . . . Richards again would not allow the horse to finish . . . The Boob tired and his rider decided not to run the risk of knocking him out. . . . Nellie, an ancient mare, gave the crowd a laugh . . . tied to a fence awaiting the gap race, she shook herself loose and went on a private point-to-point race . . . she carefully avoided the coop at the first fence, taking a sharp turn to go through the gate . . . she was caught and ran a splendid race, but with a rider this time.

An Underwater Study of Old Herring Hog Porpoise

Boyle on Job, Planning for Charles Town

Resoiling of Racing Strip Under Way at West Virginia Track

Special Dispatch to The Post

Charles Town, W. Va., March 10.—Back home after visiting the winter race tracks, President-General Manager Al J. Boyle announces numerous improvements to this plant for the 46-day meeting of the Charles Town Jockey Club, beginning May 13.

Several new barns, to be located south of the grandstand, are already under construction. A water tank holding thousands of gallons, will be installed, so that the plant's sanitary conditions will be improved. The racing strip is being resoiled and the turns graded and banked. The clubhouse, administration building and grandstand will be painted, while all roads and walks will undergo repairs.

While visiting Hot Springs, Ark., Fair Grounds, La., as well as the Hialeah and Tropical Park tracks in Florida, President Boyle talked with hundreds of horsemen. Many have already filed stall applications for the racing here this summer.

Race Secretary Fred Burton and Assistant Secretary Greg Johnson, who spent the winter in Florida, are lining up the finest race riders. Burton is working on the condition book for the meeting and will issue same to horsemen next month.

Boyle is increasing the track's parking space, as a checkup last year showed that three-quarters of the fans motor here.

In addition to getting things shipshape for the summer's racing here, President Al Boyle is busy on plans for the Waterford Downs track to be built in the northern panhandle of this State.

Horsemen, who plan to race here or at Waterford Downs, should file stall applications at once with President-General Manager Al J. Boyle. There is room for 700 horses here, with Waterford Downs being able to accommodate a bit over 1,100 thoroughbreds.

Selections at Tropical Park

Dear Al—I have been asked what chance Seabiscuit's earnings of $437,730 have of staying on top of the money-winning heap. Challedon may surpass the West Coast ace. Although his handlers did not send him after the big money this winter, Challedon apparently is sound and, barring accident, there's plenty of stake money for him. I believe that the new money-winning champion will come from a horse of the Bimelech type. Challedon failed to gather in any of the big 2-year old money. Bimelech collected $135,090 as a juvenile. This gives the Bradley colt a big advantage. Now, if he can sweep the big three of 3-year-old racing, the Kentucky Derby, Preakness and Belmont. Seabiscuit's crown will be none too secure. While on the subject of money-winning, I would like to defend the Biscuit. I have heard it said that Sun Beau did not have the same chance at big purses. However, it must be remembered that he raced in a golden era and many stakes he won are now only a third as much. Cun Beau, too, had a crack at a $100,000 race, the Coffroth Handicap, and failed through one cause or another. Here's one I picked up yesterday: A bookie joint was playing to the $2 and $5 trade. One day a man came in and bet $200 to win on a horse. He returned every day for a week and lost $200 at a crack. This better's horses were so bad that they did not get a "call." The bookie, anxious to keep his "sucker" on the string, instructed the man announcing the positions of the horses at various stages of the race to call the better's horse at least once in every race. The next day the "sucker" came in and bet $5,000 on Windbag, a 20-1 shot. The bookie nugged the announcer and whispered "Now, don't forget to give this sap's horse, Windbag, a call." Soon came the announcement that they were off. The calls came at the quarter, half, three-quarters, but Windbag had not been named. Came the stretch call, and still the announcer did not mention Windbag. Finally came the finish call. ". . . and the winner, by five lengths, is Windbag! And no bunk, either, mister." BILL.

First race—Fair Chance from the Calumet Farm barn appears capable of graduating from the maiden ranks in the day's opener. Haas will do the booting on the youngster. Sea Chanty has shown speed in trials and is a threat. Maesaca comes from a stable which has won many similar events.

Second race—Epical has the best figure in this group and needs only to turn in one of those best efforts. Naughty is a fair sort and is favored by a light assignment. Sugarage for the minor award.

Third race—Little Bolo has done about everything asked. The route, the weight and the company seem right. Maechance has speed on occasions and is dangerous. Billie Day could make a money appearance.

Fourth race—Go Home, on general form, deserves the top spot in this snug field of sprinters. Flinchum is slated to do the saddle job. Night Tide is as fit as those recent good efforts. Double B. will be close despite the weight.

Fifth race—Conde Rico will have the "money-riding" Schmidl in the pilot house and the combination could be the right one. Bull Whip looms as the probable favorite and will be in the thick of contention. Charlotte Girl likes the track.

Sixth race—Stable slips in this with a mere 100 pounds and the overnight jockey pick is Flinchum. I shall string along. White Hot and Repeller have shown enough to warrant respect.

Seventh race—Inscolassie has all the earmarks of a winning favorite in company of this sort. Packer should give us a good ride. Satiation and Zayin are recommended by good trials.

Eighth race—Looks as if I'm trying to make this another "Flinchum day." I'm forced to go to the crack apprentice's mount in the day's finale. White Ginger has the kick necessary to turn back this kind. El Puma and Gallant Neb to fill out the money bracket.

Substitute race—If this event is used I'll take Car-Rou, Totache, Ranch Boss.

Best bet—Go Home.

Eagles, Rovers Meet to Settle Second Place

Match Tomorrow Night Important To Title Aims

The New York Rovers, battling down the stretch of the Eastern Amateur Hockey League's race, will be the attraction at Riverside Stadium tomorrow night when they meet the Washington Eagles in a crucial match at 8:30 o'clock.

The Rovers boys, apparently eliminated from the race recently, yesterday gained undisputed possession of second place and forged within six points of the Baltimore Orioles as they shut out the Jersey Skeeters at Madison Square Garden, 3 to 0.

The Eagles will go into a deadlock with the Rovers if they win tomorrow night. Otherwise they will be eliminated from the pennant race and all but wiped out of a second place finish.

Victory for New York tomorrow night would send it within four points of the Orioles and place it in a position to seriously menace the supremacy of Baltimore when the Orioles and Rovers meet in Baltimore Wednesday night.

Disappointed over last Saturday night's 6 to 5 defeat by Atlantic City after his Eagles had gained an early 4 to 0 command, Coach Redvers Mackenzie yesterday declared that Washington not only will defeat the Rovers tomorrow night, but will be ready for a great stretch pennant drive against the Orioles.

"We have two matches remaining both with New York and Baltimore," Mackenzie said yesterday," and we will be out to take all four starts. We got all of the bad play out of our system against Atlantic City and will be at full strength for our remaining tests.

On Fishing

Herring hog, porpoise, or dolphin of the ancients, it matters little the name by which we call this oddest and most attractive creature of the open seas. Hardly known to the once-in-a-while angler, and little better by many who have fished offshore for years, yet there is so much in their graceful swimming to interest humans as they play in the bow-wake of a vessel or fish from the same schools. Most certainly there are more questions asked about them than any fish that lives in the waters of the earth.

ACKERMAN

They are not, however, a fish, but a mammal, and just about the fastest thing that swims. Note in the picture taken by Capt. Tommy Gifford, the well known big game fish guide, how lavish was Mother Nature in streamlining the porpoise.

They are given nothing but the bare essentials. The large forefippers that correspond to the big pectoral fins of game fish, the forelegs of land vertibrates, and the arms of humans. No ventral or anal appendages, only the deeply forked, horizontal tail, and the small heavy top fin—the last, the one characteristic possessed in common with most of the fishes.

Tommy's picture is exceptional not only because it shows plainly that the porpoise is air-breathing, but for the reason the actual action of expelling is intensified, and pictured because of the small globules of water coming from the body with the air from the lungs.

Porpoises, particularly the very young, have many of the attributes of humans. Probably because they haven't attained the strength necessary to tear loose from fishermen's nets, they are caught in large numbers. Those in the tanks at Marineland show they have brains, and that they use them.

Only last week, Jack Carpenter, member of the Rod and Reel Club, bonefishing at Long Key in a small skiff, sighted a porpoise swimming slower than is usual and with considerable effort. Investigating, he found the big animal had part of a fishnet wound around its tail in such a manner that free movement of it was almost impossible.

His desire to help the distressed porpoise was evidently sensed, for it made no effort to get away as he drew up alongside; or was it just showing another human trait and wanting company in its misery.

Whatever you want to say of it, the mammal lay quietly until Capt. Carpenter cleared the net and allowed it to swim free.

In the old days of wooden ships and iron men, the porpoise was the fresh meat of the sailor at sea. Because we had listened to more than a few of the tales of their harpooning, the fact was fresh in mind, when early in the day of our commercial fishing off the Florida coast, we brought aboard a fine fat baby twisted up in a hundred yards or more of net.

Fresh meat in those days, discounting the ever present razerback hogmeat, was just as scarce as though one was at sea, but thoughs of thick steaks faded quickly into the background for the cries and actions of the little fellow could well be likened to those of any lost little boy.

We did just what you would have done, eased him gently back over the side to a reunion with his waiting, worried mother.

Havana 'Cap To Brown King

Havana, March 10 (AP).—Two Chilian-bred horses waged an exciting duel for first place in the $15,000 Havana City handicap at Oriental Park today, as Joe W. Brown's 8-year-old Brown King beat out the favored Confiado, owned by Isidore Bieber by a head. Balloter was a close third.

A record crowd of more than 20,000 saw Brown King, which raced in Chile as Palais Royal, clip four fifths of a second from the track record for a mile and a quarter as he finished in 2:02 1-5. The winner paid $10 for $2 in the mutuel betting.

For the first mile it was anyone's race, then Confiado and Brown King drew away from the field. They ran neck-and-neck down the stretch and i nthe last furlong Ronnie Nash urged King into a slight lead that he held to the finish.

Ida's Wins, 58-35

Ida's Department Store 145-pound cagers defeated Maurice Electrical Supply Co. five, 58 to 53, yesterday at the Takoma Fire Department gym. Laake and Clark scored 12 points apiece for the winners.

At the Crossroads

By Roger W. Babson

State Capitalism vs. Free Enterprise

EIGHT MILLION idle workers and 16,000,000,000 idle dollars in 1940's strange paradox. It's the result of a ten-year battle between those who want Government control of all credit (state capitalism) and those who want a free hand for private employers and capital. Captains of industry can afford to fight. So can the princes of politics. But you and I and our unemployed neighbors can't. We have reached the crossroads and we must choose either "the high road or the low."

Eight million unemployed must be put back to work. Under State capitalism they could have army or other compulsory jobs within several years. Under free enterprise they could have voluntary jobs in a similar length of time. But under today's half-way system, the best hope is that only a million or two will be absorbed in public or private hands within the next few years. Meanwhile, $16,000,000,000, greatest hoard of cash ever assembled, strains the Nation's bank vaults. This fund could create twice the amount of credit necessary to finance enough new industry to give every unemployed worker a job!

IT IS ESTIMATED that $6,000 is the minimum investment in building, machinery, etc, needed to provide each new job in industry. Multiply it out yourself: 5,000,000 industrial workers out of jobs, times $6,000 equals $30,000,000,000. We have the necessary credit and the public needs more goods. But private employers dare not risk their money in new enterprises. They fear the Government, its investigations, tax bills, and the like. And the Government can't yet force employers to use their money and credit against their will.

The Government's game, according to many people, is to force all capital into Government bonds, keep the demand for these bonds so keen that the Government can undertake more and more enterprises formerly financed by private capital. Then by competing unfairly in those industries against private employers, the Government completely frightens capital. Hence, today's market for new money is bone-dry, parched by ten successive years of uncertainty—uncertainty as to which side will win the gigantic struggle between state capitalism vs. free enterprise. Right now, no one knows who will win.

THE ISSUE of state capitalism versus free enterprise has never been put squarely before the people. The American public simply voted for a change of administration in 1932—not for state capitalism. After four years of recovery, they voted for more recovery in 1936—not for state capitalism. Even this fall, I doubt if the public will realize what the real issue is. The Washington crowd has been as clever in their schemes to gain power as were the Wall street tycoons of the twenties. Take the recent insurance investigation, for instance. Most people believe that this probe is a good thing. I approve of it if its motive is to give the country information on a business in which there are 63,000,000 policyholders.

But many people are not sure that the motive is so simple and straightforward as that. Some believe the idea is to frighten insurance executives so that they will invest more of their funds in Government bonds, even though that could be very bad for policyholders. These people cite the banks as proof of their point. Their contention is that banks now are virtually forced to invest only in "Governments," that other investments are too often frowned on by bank examiners. Can it be that the plan is to force insurance companies to buy only "Governments" instead of making investments in private industry?

CRITICS also throw brickbats at other Government agencies. They say SEC is trying to discourage private financing and to put the Government in a position where it can go to the public and say: "Private capital refuses to finance new enterprises and new industries, will not provide new jobs. Hence, we must!" These critics use, as a case in point, the recent instance where SEC refused to approve a bond issue of a utility which was to finance expansion and provide new jobs. They recall that the Administration has been very willing to issue bonds to finance Government-built power projects.

Employers are especially upset because they believe the people do not know what is going on behind the scenes. They think that the whole scheme is cleverly devised to gain control of the Nation's credit system. Regardless of whether there is any such plan or not, the effect is the same: Private money is These workers will not get jobs idle, so are millions of workers. until either the Government or private enterprises uses this money. I hope it will be used in private enterprises. The latter is far more efficient, has more drive, more brains. There are plenty of white elephants on the record of free enterprise, but none so condemning as recent Government projects.

THE POINT I want to make today, however, is that it is time to bring the issue out in the open. Let us halt the "slow-death" process. Let us stop using 8,000,000 unemployed as pawns in this struggle about which they know nothing. Let us end the camouflaged tax bills aimed at Government control of credit. Let us call a halt to the disguised investigations aimed at the same objective. Let us put the $16,000,000,000 of cold cash and the 8,000,000 of jittery jobless back to work! Let us prohibit waste and crime of all kinds.

There's Humor Among Thieves, Week Proves

By Gladwin Hill

Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, March 10.—The ancient and dishonorable institution of larceny, both grand and petty, has fallen upon balmy days.

Larceny used to be a simple matter of give and take, but last week everything got pixillated.

A burglar broke into a Memphis radio announcer's home and ran off with . . . two packs of cards . . . and . . . a Bible.

An automobile burglar in Salt Lake City discovered—too late—that his loot was $60 worth of vitamins for undernourished foxes.

An 81-year-old San Pedro, Calif., man foiled a holdup man by diving into the bay.

In Greensboro, N. C., nine dentists' offices were burgled on the tenth anniversary of the burglary of nine dentists' offices.

A Pittsburgh clothing store was held up for the third time in three months—by the same bandit. "It's got so," the proprietor lamented, "that when this guy comes in he doesn't need to say anything—he just pulls the gun, and we give him the dough."

Another Pittsburgh storekeeper came out of a holdup five cents ahead. He yelled so loud the bandits scrammed so fast they left a nickel.

That seems to finish up the felons—but they had plenty of competition in the dizzy doings derby.

A Toledo man, en route to collect a safe driving prize, was arrested for speeding . . . and a Pittsburgh hitch-hiker spurned a lift from a car with a radio.

When the Paducah, Ky., hook and ladder broke down, the fire department announced it would be towed to fires by a wrecking car . . .

A Houston, Tex., college boy (Rice Institute) campaigned against 11 coeds for the title of Queen of the May . . . A Washington, Pa., jury deliberating a case involving a case of beer not only acquitted the defendant, but drank up half the evidence . . . and—

A New York judge ruled that it's legal to thumb your nose at a cop if he's not in uniform.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

An army officer points out that errors of defense are frequently the most costly.

The officer's partner, a good player, failed to see it at the time. Would you? Here are the cards and bidding, with East-West vulnerable and 60 points on score:

	♠ 2 ♡ Q J 9 8 7 ◇ A K Q 10 3 ♣ K Q
♠ A K 4 3 ♡ A 5 2 ◇ 8 7 6 ♣ A 10 3	NORTH WEST EAST SOUTH

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	2 ◇	2 ♠	Pass
Pass	3 ♡	Pass	4 ♣
Pass	5 ♣	Pass	Pass
Dble.	Pass	Pass	Pass

Says the officer: "Bold bidding succeeded when quick aces were too quick." His partner, West, led the ace of clubs. How should he continue?

West played his ace of spades and then his ace of hearts, which was trumped. Declarer drew trumps and threw his remaining spade losers on the good diamonds, making five odd.

The answer is easy. West must play his king and ace of spades, forcing dummy to trump, establishing his ten of clubs as a sure winner. It is very unlikely that declarer will have a singleton spade as well as dummy, for in that case, East, with seven spades, would surely have raised more vigorously.

SATURDAY'S ANSWER.

with Slocum

It is my considered opinion that I wouldn't want to meet Hedy Lamarr at 9 o'clock in the morning on my day off, but Saturday I greeted an aeroplane from California which carried a real nice girl. And purty, too.

It was the irrepressible Gracie Allen, the laugh getting half of the Burns and Allen team. Gracie came to this town as part of her campaign to get elected President of the United States on her Surprise Party ticket. I feel I am letting you in on no secret when I point out that this is something some press agent dreampt up after a tough bout in a Hollywood opium den. I join with several of our more prominent transient residents in the thought that the Presidential elections are anything but funny, but Gracie is so nice about the thing that it seems a good idea at the moment. For all we know there may be a place for a little conscious humor in this political scene.

Grace shivered her way off the plane and into our hearts by the simple expedient of saying "Hello, it's cold." Meeting Hollywood gentry is no novelty, nor is their stock gag, "heaven's, it's cold. You know I just came from Hollywood, CALIFORNIA, and it's much warmer out there." I always want to point out that when I studied geography at the age of ten I learned that the southern part of California remains warmer than the central Atlantic coast in winter. And summer, too. Gracie evidently knew that, too.

Later she signed an autograph and the pen shook out of her shivering hand. She picked it up and never mentioned that it's warmer in California. Later still she said it was a nice trip, there was a delightful baby on board, she was tired and was going to bed and it was nice meeting me, good by. Never a word about the California climate!

Gracie has a charming collection of zany answers to reporters questions. She has the extremely good taste to make no effort to outsmart the gentlemen of the press, which is just as well, because rumor hath it that the journalists working in Washington are more inclined toward being pros at the racket than are their starry-eyed contemporaries in sunny, sunny, sunny California, land of perpetual sunshine.

Another Nero Wolfe Story

BY REX STOUT

OVER MY DEAD BODY

Drawn into Neya Tormic's trouble against his will and because Carla Lovchen said Neya was his daughter, Nero Wolfe sent Archie Goodwin to report events. The orchid-loving mystery solver and his confidential secretary already knew that Neya was accused by Nat Driscoll, a pupil in the fencing school where Carla and Neya taught of stealing diamonds from his coat. First, Archie was to concentrate on the diamonds, second, on a paper hidden in one of Wolfe's books by Carla. At 5 o'clock, everyone was to meet with Nikola Miltan, head of the studio. But first Archie met Neya, who denied being away from her pupil, Mr. Ludlow, at the time of the robbery. Later in the office, Ludlow pointed out that his suit was identical with the one Driscoll had worn the previous day and that when Driscoll saw Neya in the locker room she had been fetching cigarettes from Ludlow's coat and not stealing diamonds from Driscoll's.

CHAPTER 6

"WE'VE been waiting for you, Mr. Driscoll——"

"I'm sorry," the plump one stammered, edging around. "Very sorry . . . unh . . . this is Mr. Thompson, my lawyer—Mr. Miltan . . ."

As the gray-haired one extended a hand for the shake he conceded the point without reservation or qualification. "I am Mr. Driscoll's counsel. I thought it best to come personally—this regrettable affair—extremely regrettable—will you kindly introduce me to Miss Tormic? If you will be so good . . ."

That was done by Miltan, who looked a little bewildered. The lawyer's bow was courteous and respectful, as was his verbal acknowledgement; Neya stood motionless and silent. He turned. "These people—are these persons whom Mr. Driscoll—before whom he accused Miss Tormic——"

Miltan nodded. "We've been waiting for him, to——"

"I know. We're late. My client was reluctant to come, and I had to persuade him that his presence was necessary. Miss Tormic, what I have to say is addressed primarily to you, but these others should hear it—in fact, they must hear it, in justice to you. First for the facts. When Mr. Driscoll left his home yesterday morning he had in his pocket a pillbox containing diamonds which he intended to take to a jeweler to be set in a bracelet. From his office he phoned the jeweler and discussed the matter. His secretary took the box of diamonds to arrange for their delivery. They are at the jeweler's now. Here, later, Mr. Driscoll, lamentably and inexcusably, but innocently, forgot that his secretary——"

A clatter of comment from all corners interrupted him. He smiled at Neya, but got nothing in return. Driscoll had a handkerchief out, wiping his brow, trying to find a place to look without meeting a pair of eyes. Miltan sputtered:

"Do you mean to say that this infamous—this irresponsible——"

"Please!" The lawyer had a hand up. "Please let me finish. Mr. Driscoll's lapse of memory was inexcusable. But he was honestly convinced that he had seen Miss Tormic with his coat——"

"It was my coat," Ludlow snapped. "Of the same pattern. I have it on."

"I see. Well. That explains that. Was it in the same locker?"

"The one adjoining." Ludlow was severe. "But Mr. Driscoll should know that before making a grave accusation——"

"Certainly he should." The lawyer conceded everything again. "Even the coincidence of the coats is no excuse for him. That's why I insisted on his coming, to make his apology to Miss Tormic in the presence of all of you. His reluctance is understandable. He is extremely embarrassed and humiliated." He eyed his client. "Well?"

Driscoll, gripping his handkerchief, faced Neya Tohmic. "I apologize," he mumbled. "I'm damn sorry." The mumble became abruptly and surprisingly an outraged roar. "Of course I'm sorry, damn it!"

Someone giggled. Nikola Miltan said grimly, "You certainly should be sorry. It might have been disastrous both for Miss Tormic and for me."

"I know it. I've said I'm sorry, and I am."

THE LAWYER put in smoothly and sweetly, "I hope Miss Tormic . . . may we hope for an expression from you—of forgiveness? Of . . . er . . . quittance?" He took an envelope from his pocket. "In fact, I thought it would be as well for you to have Mr. Driscoll's written apology to support his oral one, so I brought it along"—he got a paper from the envelope—"and I brought also a quittance, just an informal sentence or two, which I'm sure you will want to sign for him in return——"

"Just a minue." It was me entering my cue. "I represent Miss Tormic."

The way he went on guard like lightning, facially, was a treat. He demanded, "Who are you, sir? A lawyer?"

"Nope, I'm not a lawyer, but I speak English and I represent Miss Tormic and we're not before a court. She isn't signing anything."

"But my dear sir, why not? Merely an informal——"

"That's the trouble, it's too informal. For instance, what if Miltan here gets sore about his fracas, though it's not her fault, and she loses her job? Or what if this thing has been turned loose around town and she can't catch up with it? Nothing doing on the quittance."

"I have no intention," Miltan put in, "of dismissing Miss Tormic. But I agree that it is not necessary for her to sign anything. I am quite sure she will have no desire to make trouble for Mr. Driscoll." He looked at her.

She spoke for the first time. "No, certainly." She sounded darned unconcerned for a girl who had just escaped being thrown in the hoosegow as a sneak thief. Almost indifferent, as if her mind was on something else. "I will make no trouble."

The lawyer pounced on her. "Then, Miss Tormic, if you feel that way, surely you have no objection to signing——"

"Damn it, let her alone!" It was his own client tripping him up. Driscoll glared at him. "Damn a lawyer anyway! If I'd had the nerve to face it, I'd have done just as well if I'd come alone!" He confronted Miltan. "Now I've apologized! I'm sorry! I'm damn sorry! I like this place. I've been overweight for years. I'm damn near fat! I've monkeyed around with exercises and health farms and damn fool games throwing a ball and riding a horse as tall as a skyscraper, and the first thing I've ever done to sweat that is any fun is what I do here! I may be a rotten fencer, but I like it! I don't care whether Miss Tormic signs a paper or not, I want to be friends with Miltan!" He whirled. "Miss Lovchen! I want to be friends with you! Miss Tormic is your friend and I acted like a damn fool. I am a damn fool. Will you fence with me or won't you? I mean right now!"

Somebody snickered. People moved. The lawyer looked dignified. Carla said, "I work for Mr. Miltan. I'll follow his instructions." Miltan said something conciliatory and diplomatic, and it was apparent that Mr. Driscoll wasn't going to be deprived of his fun. I faded into the background. The chinless wonder, whose name I hadn't got, a blond guy with thin lips and an aggressive nose who stood and walked like a soldier, went up to Neya with a thin smile and said something evidently meant to be agreeable, and was followed by Donald Barrett for a similar performance. Mrs. Miltan crossed to her and patted her on the shoulder, and then she was approached by Percy Ludlow. They spoke together a minute, and she left him and headed for me.

I grinned at her. "Well, a pretty good show. I hope you didn't mind my horning in. Nero Wolfe never lets a client sign anything except a check drawn to his order."

"I didn't mind. I say good-by. I am going to fence with Mr. Ludlow. Thank you for coming."

"Your eyes glitter."

"My eyes? They always glitter."

"Any message for your father?"

"I think—not now. No."

"You ought to run down and say hello to him."

"I will someday. Au revoir then."

"So long."

Turning to go, she bumped into the lawyer and he apologized profusely. That accomplished, he addressed me:

"Could I have your name, sir?"

I told him.

He repeated it. "Archie Goodwin. Thank you. If I may ask, in what capacity do you represent Miss Tormic?"

I was exasperated. "Look here," I said, "I am willing to stipulate that a lawyer has a right to live, and I'm aware that even when he's dead no worm will enter his coffin because if it did he'd make it sign some kind of a paper. I suppose if you don't get that thing signed you'll have a tantrum. Give it to me."

From the envelope, which he was still clutching in his hand, he extracted the document and handed it over. A glance showed me that his two informal sentences were in fact five legal-size paragraphs. I got out my pen and with a quick flourish signed on the dotted line at the bottom, "Queen Victoria."

"There," I said, and shoved it at him, and moved off before he could react, considering how dignity slows a man up.

THE ROOM was about empty. Miltan's wife was over by a desk, talking with Belinda Reade. Carla Lovchen, along with the others, had disappeared, presumably to let the rich fat man enjoy some fun. He must have been a pip of a swordsman, I reflected, as I got my hat and coat from the rack and meandered to the hall and out the street door to the sidewalk.

My wrist told me it was a quarter to 6. Wolfe would still be up in the plant rooms, and he wasn't enthusiastic about being disturbed regarding business while there, but I considered that this wasn't business, properly speaking, but a family matter. So I found a drugstore with a phone booth and called the number.

"Hello, Mr. Wolfe? Mr. Goodwin speaking."

"Well?"

"Well, I'm in a drugstore at Forty-eighth and Lexington. It's all over. It was a farce in three acts. First, she, meaning your daughter, seemed to be more bored than bothered. Second, a chap named Percy said she was frisking his coat for cigarettes, not Driscoll's for diamonds, which appeared to be news to her, judging from her expression. Third act, enter Driscoll with a trouble hound and a written apology. There hadn't been any diamonds in his coat. None had been stolen. His mistake. Sorry and damn sorry. So I'm headed for home. I may add that she doesn't resemble you a particle and she is very good-look——"

"You're sure it's clear?"

"It's cleared up. Settled. I wouldn't say it's entirely clear."

"You went there with two problems. What about the second one?"

"No light on it. Not a glimmer. No chance to sniff around on it. There was a mob present, and when the meeting broke up both Balkans went off to give fencing lessons."

"Who is the man named Percy?"

"Percy Ludlow. My age, and a good deal like me—courteous, gifted, of distinguished appear——"

"You say my—she seemed to be bored. Do you mean to imply—is she stupid?"

"Oh, no. I mean it. Maybe she's a little complicated, but she's not stupid."

SILENCE. No talk. It lasted so long that I finally said, "Hello, you there?"

"Yes. Get her and bring her here. I want to see her."

"Yeah, I thought so. I expected that. It's a perfectly natural feeling and does you credit, but that's why I phoned, to explain that I asked her if she had a message for you and she said no, and I said she ought to drop in on you to say hello and she said she would someday, and now she's in there crossing blades with Percy——"

"Wait until she's through and bring her."

"Do you mean that?"

"I do."

"I may have to carry her or——"

He hung up, which is a trick I detest.

I went to the fountain and got a glass of grapefruit juice, and while drinking it considered persuasions to use on her short of force, but developed nothing satisfactory, and then strolled back along Forty-eighth street to the scene of operations.

Nikola Miltan and his wife were the only ones in the office. It looked to me as if she had been headed for the door when I entered, but when I took off my hat and coat and put them on the rack, explaining that I wanted to see Miss Tohmic when she was disengaged, apparently she changed her mind and decided to stick around. Miltan invited me to have a chair and I sat down not far from the desk where he was, while his wife opened a door of the big glass cabinet and began rearranging things which didn't need it.

"I have met Mr. Nero Wolfe," Miltan offered politely.

I nodded. "So I understand."

"He is a remarkable man. Remarkable."

"Well, I know of one guy that would agree with you."

"Only one?"

"At least one. Mr. Wolfe."

"Ah. A joke." He laughed politely. "I imagine there are many others. In fact—what is it, Jeanne?"
